Bluewall show: Shear music, Shear madness

By JODY GABIN
Collegian Staff

There's an individuality to Jules Shear's music that both invites and defies comparison. His lyrics are amazing; lean and witty, they just beg to be pulled from context and quoted at random.

Shear keeps things simple, avoiding the incomprehensibly poetic for an easy elegance; he has long shown a gift for effortlessly flowing melody and the ability to compose lyrics that are clever for what they say, not merely how they say it.

Jules Shear has been pursuing a solo career since 1983. His first three efforts ('83's Watchdog, '85's Eternal Return and '86's Demo-itis) made him a much sought after writer. He gained extensive recognition following Cyndi Lauper's successful cover of "All Through the Night" in 1984, and the Bangles top 30 hit with "If She Knew What She Wants" in 1986.Unfortunately, Shear was more successful with critics than the public, and for a time, became somewhat of a commercial failure.

In 1986, Shear teamed up with Cars guitarist Elliot Easton to form the critically-lauded Reckless Sleepers. The Reckless Sleepers' expanded musical texture (pop, country, reggae and soul) had a clarity and commerciality that Shear's other projects lacked.In 1988, the band released their debut album, Big Boss Sounds, on I.R.S. Records, and toured that fall. Oddly enough, it was this tour that provided Shear the motivation to return to solo work. Midway through each show, Shear would sing and strum a handful of songs solo, reminding him of the playing he'd done over a decade before, when as an aspiring songwriter, he moved to Los Angeles and hit the club circuit.

The result is The Third Party, Shear's second I.R.S. offering, and the album he is currently promoting. With only his nasal voice to guide him, his songs sound strikingly similar to those of Bob Dylan and Arlo Guthrie; The Third Party is the most intimate record of Shear's career.

The LP is classic, bare-bones Shear, with typically memorable tunes and ingenious turns of phrase; Shear's music unpretentiously leads the listener deep into the artist's heart.

Although Shear is accompanied by the Church's Marty Willson-Piper on his album, he will be performing solo acoustically.

"I don't mind playing guitar live," he says of his uniquely effective southpaw technique. "The Third Party is about songs. Not production, just songs."

Opening the show will be UMass' own Minibus Sandwitch — local favorites, famed for their heavy guitar Jimi Hendrix-esque sound.

Also appearing will be Free Press — a fun-filled reggae-tinged dance band from Northampton.

Due to singer/guitarist Bill Million's rumored African Sleeping Sickness, the Feelies will not be appearing, as originally scheduled.

Jules Shear, Minibus Sandwitch and Free Press will be performing at the Bluewall Coffeehouse on Friday, May 27 at 7 p.m. The show is sponsored by UPC and WMUA 91.1 FM. Tickets are available from For the Record, Main Street Records and Tix Unlimited. Admission is $3 for UMass students and $5 for the general public. There will be a cash bar.

Magic from Bulgaria

By CYNTHIA CONRAD
Collegian Correspondent

On Saturday, April 28, the otherworldly voices of the Bulgarian State Radio and Television Female Vocal Choir will fill the acoustics of John M. Greene Hall at Smith College to benefit the Northampton Center for the Arts.

Popularly know by their album title, Le Mystere Des Voix Bulgares, they have recorded two volumes of traditional and contemporary Bulgarian music, released in the United States by Nonesuch and 4AD. This choral group won a Grammy in 1990 for the second volume and various members have recently recorded with such artists as Kate Bush and Ministry. Many other popular artists such as George Harrison, Linda Ronstadt, Graham Nash, Pat Metheny, David Byrne, Robert Plant and 10,000 Maniacs have praised the 24-member group's ethereal singing. Jerry Garcia has said that they were the inspiration for "Uncle John's Band."

The choral group's 1988 United States tour was sold out. Their popularity in Northern America can be attributed in a part to the rising interest in international music. Their audience ranges from hip New York culture-mongers to progressive music listeners.

According to Marcel Cellier in Volume Two's liner notes, the sacred tradition of Bulgarian music has been handed generation to generation since mythological antiquity by the Thracians, of whom the legendary Orpheus was prince. The melodic chants that these "daughters of Orpheus" perform are constructed using elements of archaic diaphony and modern polyphony to create difficult, dissonant intervals which even non-musicians find spine-tingling. The result is breathtaking; the highly individualized voices float, quiver, scurry, swoop, collide and yelp effortlessly, creating eerie, heartbreakingly mournful or joyous effects.

The group was founded in 1952 in an effort to seek out highly regionalized folk songs of Bulgaria and popularize them through television and radio broadcasts. The goals have expanded to include the showcasing of contemporary composers as well. The music in Bulgaria is highly competitive; the Festival of Koprivtchitsa alone draws 4,000 pre-selected candidates. Although the songs are in various regional Bulgarian dialects, the sonic quality of their art transcends language barriers. Subjects of their songs are often related socio-historically to periods in Bulgarian history from Bulgaria's 865 conversion to Christianity to their tragic 500-year Ottoman domination.

This concert is a perfect acoustic feast for all fans of unique female vocals or international music; it is a rare invitation to hear what some have called "the most beautiful music on the planet."

Le Mystere des Voix Bulgares can be seen at John M. Greene Hall, Saturday at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are $25 for Special Donor seats and $16 for General Admission.

Pigs, horses, cows, goats, sheep and people

By STEVE CLARK
Collegian Correspondent

This Friday and Saturday, UMass Grinnell Arena (lower Boyden fields), will be filled with pigs, horses, cattle, sheep, goats and various other animals in celebration of the 55th Annual Baystate Livestock Classic. The show is being put on by the Animal Science Department, and those involved in it are more than a little excited.

"The whole idea is to give you experience," says Ingrid Denouter, a UMass freshman who will be showing a cow this year.

She says the show consists mainly of fitting and showing animals to audiences, in order to give presenters experience handling and caring for animals. People from various majors are participating; each person trains one animal for an extended period of time, will be showing the results of that training on Friday.

There will be one winning showperson for every breed, who will go on the next day to compete in the Premier Showperson Competition. This competition is more difficult, because every showperson must present one animal of each breed to the audience. The winner of this competition will receive the Ensminger Trophy, and walk home the Premier Showperson-of-the-year.

In addition to the competition, there will be contests for the general public in pie-eating, balloon-throwing and horseshoe-throwing. There will be a sack race as well, and extra attractions include a sheepdog demonstration by Kristin Whittle, a baby animal parade, a miniature horse exposition and rides in carriages drawn by Clydesdale horses.

Teresa Conway, a junior animal science major, is the chairwoman for the event. Conway is in charge of several committees, each of which is subsequently in charge of finding judges and supervisors, among others, to help run the event. Judges are mostly local farmers, while the supervisors are specially picked to help each individual showperson train his or her animal.

A supervisor is needed for each species to introduce the animal to the trainer, and to teach the trainer how to take care of the animal. The training starts about two months before the show, to allow time for animal and trainer to get to know each other.

"Everyone has to bathe the animals," Denouter says. "You also have to clip them, and each bread has a different way of being clipped."

Stephen Balestrier, a freshman, is showing Felicia, a pig. The training begins, according to Balestrier, when you meet your animal and try to befriend it. He then described how he had to train Felicia to walk in designated directions, as guided by a stick. His experience with Felicia has been a positive one, and he doesn't want to end his animal training there.

"It's great," he said, smiling. "I can't wait to try another animal."

"There's not a lot of pressure, not a lot of competition," said Balestrier. "We're just out there to have fun."

This Livestock Classic originated in 1938, and was then called the Little International Livestock Show, based on the Livestock Exposition in Chicago. Throughout the years it has been an educative and informative tool for both showpeople and onlookers. One of the purposes of the Livestock Classic has been to show people what's going on in the field of agriculture, according to Detouner.

The show will take place on April 27 from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. and April 28 from 9 p.m. to 4 p.m.

Bechdel: cartoonist to watch out for

By NICOLE GONZALEZ
Collegian Staff

"What's that weird toxic smell?" asks Ginger.

"Are you referring to my personalized seduction scent?" asks Louis, smoothing her close-cropped hair. "One part patchouli, one part Chanel No. 5 and one part Old Spice. Sweeps women off their feet."

These characters are a part of the popular strip Dykes to Watch Out For, created by Alison Bechdel, a lesbian cartoonist who is originally from Northampton but now lives in Minneapolis, Minn., where she works for Equal Times, a gay newspaper.

Bechdel will present a slideshow on Sunday, April 29 at 7:30 p.m. in UMass Mahar Auditorium.

Bechdel's slideshow, described as "an extended-family night," will take an entertaining look at her artistic development from childhood drawings to her international success. She will cover topics such as the traditional representation of female cartoon characters, growing up as a lesbian in a woman-hating culture and drawing as therapy. Each of the characters in Dykes to Watch Out For will be introduced along with insight into their creation and development.

Another section of the show will focus on Servants to the Cause, her new comic strip about life behind the scenes on the collective of a gay and lesbian newspaper. Servants regularly appears in The Advocate, the national gay newsmagazine. After the first printing of Dykes to Watch Out For in the "1983 Lesian Pride" issue of Womannews, Bechdel has published two best-selling collections of her work and a calendar with Firebrand Books. Dykes to Watch Out For now runs in over 25 gay/lesbian and feminist publications in the United States, Canada and Scotland. It has been featured in the local newspaper, Valley Women's Voice.

Characters from Dykes to Watch Out For.

"Her characters are very real," he said. "I can see people that I know in a lot of the characters that she has. They're very developed. And her artwork is amazing. She really gets down on details. She's very attentive to little details, like Bloom County's Berke Breathed. She's very funny, but a lot of the subjects she deals with are very real and current."

Sunday night, Bechdel will reveal the hopes and goals she has for her work and will demonstrate her belief in cartoons as a powerful, accessible medium for education and change. Audiences of gays, lesbians and bisexuals from all over the United States and Canada have responded to Bechdel's slideshow with loving laughter, provocative questions and thunderous applause.

Tickets for the slideshow are $6 general public and $3 Umass students. Proceeds benefit the UMass Program for Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Concerns, who will be raffling off a piece of Bechdel's artwork as well as free weekends at various Bed and Breakfast's around New England.

GEO discusses action options

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Employee Organization increased pressure on University administrators yesterday, announcing plans to hold a membership vote on whether to withhold final spring grades or to strike if an agreement over a union election is not reached.

GEO leaders and University administrators closed their fourth day of negotiations over a union election yesterday, planning to reopen discussions at 9 a.m. on Monday.

"We are going ahead with preparations for a vote of the entire membership for a possible grade withholding or a full-fledged strike of graduate student employees," Marc Kenen, GEO negotiating committee member said. "It's becoming clear that it is almost time for us to do this."

Kenen said the two parties have been in intense, sometimes late-night, negotiations this week over issues relating to a fall union election for graduate student employees.

The election would allow graduate student employees to decide which union will represent them. Since last May, the GEO has been an affiliate of District 65/United Auto Workers.

GEO and supporters mass in front of Whitmore early Tuesday.

Kenen said the GEO, which had hoped to have a spring election, has agreed to a fall election but has insisted that administrators sign a "pledge of neutrality."

The neutrality agreement would forbid administrators, faculty members and all supervisory staff from advocating for or against a union, he said. GEO leaders have said this will prevent an anti-union campaign by the adminstration.

"They still have the position that they should be able to run an anti-union campaign," he said. "It's a decision for graduate students to decide, not deans and administrators."

Susan Pearson, director of academic administration and the administration's chief negotiator, said she believes they are close to an agreement but maintained the that the administration still refuses to sign a neutrality agreement.

"This is a university community, it thrives on debate and conflict," she said. "We insist that every member of the University community be feel to express his or her opinion."

A second stumbling block has surfaced in the administration's request that GEO leaders sign an agreement promising not to hold a strike from the time an agreement is signed until the election.

GEO leaders have said this is unacceptable because it would restrict their right to protest changes in the University that affect them, such as fee increases.

Pearson said a 'no-strike' clause is necessary to hold up the integrity of the agreement.

"It is ludicrous to reach an agreement, make plans for an election and then be free to withhold grades or hold another action if conditions change," Pearson said. "It is not an unreasonable expectation."

Retired professor Mottla remembered

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff

Gilbert E. Mottla, 79, director for 30 years of international programs at the University of Massachusetts College of Agriculture, later the College of Food and Natural Resources, died Monday at his South Amherst home.

A 1932 graduate of Harvard College, he was also a World War II Navy veteran serving in both the Atlantic and Pacific fleets, according to University spokeswoman Helen Wise.

Mottla came to the University in 1955 to head the department of communications in the College of Agriculture, a division handling news, publications, and radio and television work. He became responsible for international programs in 1964, according to Wise.

Dr. John Foster, a UMass professor of resource economics, said he worked with Mottla for almost 30 years. Mottla started the Center for International Studies in 1967, and was a member of the staff until his retirement in 1986, sometimes serving as director and sometimes as assistant director, he said.

Mottla was coordinator of the Malawi Project, and helped the country begin an agricultural center which has been running for almost 25 years, Foster said.

Mottla was also active in Peace Corps recruiting at UMass, as well as bringing international agricultural exchange students to the University, Foster said. When foreign visitors came to UMass, Mottla handled the administrative details of their visit, Foster said.

"He did such a nice job with the Japanese, they invited him for an all-expense paid trip to Japan," he said.

He was also the primary person working with foreign agricultural students attending the University, Foster said.

According to Wise, Mottla was a member of various organizations, including the African Educators Association, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and the National Geographic Society.

He leaves his wife, Helen; two sons, Gilbert L., MD and Anthony W. Mottla; four brothers and a sister, according to Wise.

Funeral services are scheduled for today at 1 p.m. in Grace Episcopal Church. Memorial contributions may be made to the Boston Children's Hospital, 300 Longwood Ave., Boston, 02115, or the Grace Episcopal Church, 14 Boltwood Ave., Amherst, 01002.

Duffey to testify as higher education witness

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Chancellor Duffey is one of two main witnesses scheduled to testify today before the U.S. Congressional Subcommittee on Post-secondary Education about a bill that would reward and encourage high school and college student participation in national public service.

Duffey, who also serves as president of the University of Massachusetts, and Vartan Gregorian, president of Brown University in Providence, R.I., are the two main witnesses who will testify at the regional hearing to be held at 2 p.m.

Duffey said he plans to support the bill and make suggestions to improve the language in the draft.

Some examples of the bill's provisions include allowing students to volunteer to work in a public service agency in exchange for partial forgiveness of loans or stipends, Duffey said.

The bill also encourages programs on campuses which organize, recruit and train students to work in centers assisting the elderly, homeless or other public service agencies, he said.

"It'll be a nationwide network of programs in which the federal government will assist the states in providing these for high school and college students," Duffey said.

He said the bill has a dual purpose: to aid students who otherwise would not be able to afford an education and provide and enhance badly needed public services.

"We want to open the doors to students regardless of economic background," he said.

Southwest Week to pay tribute to three

By RIC OLIVEIRA
Collegian Correspondent

The Southwest Area Government has dedicated this year's Southwest Week celebration to the memory of Sharon Galligan, Joel Mangion and Richard Koster, marking the beginning of an effort to start a scholarship fund in the names of the three University of Massachusetts students who died during the school year.

Galligan, a junior and sister at Chi Omega sorority, was found stabbed to death Dec. 18 in her car at the Hampshire Mall. Mangion, a junior and resident of Kennedy Residence hall, died March 11 after he fell while 'elevator surfing.' Koster, a sophomore and resident of Coolidge Residence Hall, apparently hanged himself April 9 in his dorm room.

The proposal, which was passed unanimously on April 12, read "that the Southwest Week be dedicated as a week, where all of us as students can share in tribute to Sharon, Joel and Rich, life and each other. As something to remember not how they died but how they lived."

The scholarship is called "The Make A Difference Award" because "whether in the community, on campus, families or friends, each went out of their way to help others."

But, SWAG is facing a financial obstacle before the scholarship is in effect — it needs $6,000 to begin the fund.

To help finance the scholarship, SWAG will donate the proceeds from the upcoming Jerry Seinfeld show towards the scholarship.

"We are hoping to receive donations from other groups on campus and even from students," Rapp said.

Contributions to the fund may be sent via campus mail to "Make A Difference Scholarship Fund," care of the Student Activities Office in the Student Union building. Checks are payable to the 'Make A Difference Scholarship Fund.'

Scales takes over as Attorney General

By LISA SHAPIRO
Collegian Staff

Adam Scales, a junior legal studies major, was named student attorney general Wednesday night by Student Government Association President Natasha Diephuis.

Scales will step down from his current position of clerk of courts for the Student Judiciary. Scales' assistant, Tara Waskom, will be the acting clerk until elections, not yet scheduled, are held, Scales said.

Scales replaces Jonathan P. Anastas, whose interim term as student attorney general expired Wednesday.

Adam Scales

Anastas, who stepped down with mixed emotions, said: "There was nothing I loved more about this University than student government." Anastas is scheduled to graduate in May.

The main function of the student attorney general is to advise students regarding the University judicial system.

Scales said his primary goal will be to rewrite the SGA constitution and get it ratified by the trustees so the SGA can be "more than just a big RSO [registered student organization] with a lot of money."

"The current constitution talks a good game, but the machinery to implement its provisions just are not there," Scales said.

A main problem in the office, as cited by Scales and other former attorney generals, is that although the office has autonomy, it does not have true authority because the SGA consitution has never been approved by the Univeristy of Massachusetts board of trustees.

In redrafting the constitution, Scales said he will consult both University and SGA officials to anticipate and clarify the areas that would be seen as problematic by the board of trustees.

Scales said he also hopes to activate a 'peer advisor program' created last semester by former student attorney general, Robert Fadel.

The program would involve student advisors working with the Northampton district attorney's office to help educate students about their legal rights and reponsibilities.

According to the plan, peer advisors may not defend a student in a judicial hearing, but may attend the hearing and conduct pre-hearing advisement for students facing charges brought forth by Residential Education or the dean of students office.

Charges range from noise violations to drug and alcohol offenses.

"This way, it's not the entire University judicial process against Joe Student alone," Scales said.

Scales was recommended to Diephuis, who makes the final decision, by a search committee. Only one other student applied for the position.

Quorum call halts BOG vote on Spartacist Youth Club ban

Govs. Bill Hewitt and Ed Corrigan's semester-long efforts to ban the Spartacus Youth Club from the Campus Center/Student Union complex were blocked again last night at the Board of Governor's meeting.

A motion Hewitt introduced on February 21 to ban the Spartacists because they refused to admit Corrigan to an open public forum on East Germany's future "based soley on [his] political affiliation" has been repeatedly tabled by the BOG.

"We've come to the end of the line," Hewitt said. "We want this issue settled now."

Both Hewitt and Corrigan are members of Young Americans for Freedom, a campus conservative student group.

The motion was about to come to a vote when Gov. Kelley Keeler pointed out that only 11 governors were present. A minimum of 13 out of the 25 voting BOG members are needed for quorum.

After Keeler's observation, the BOG meeting adjourned.

Chairwoman Sue Gordon said each side was asked to present their version of events to the Board. Corrigan submitted his story in writing to Gordon while the Spartacists declined to do so.

During a 10 minute recess last night, Gordon phoned the SYC's Cambridge office and asked them again to make a presentation. A spokesperson told her a yellow flyer they distributed on campus on March 30 explained the Spartacist position.

The flyer, which was widely distributed in the Student Union, called Hewitt a "two-bit Fuhrer" and linked him with right-wing death squads in El Salvador.

University of Massachusetts student Robb Smith, who was mentioned in the Spartacist flyer because he was attacked last year by members of the Minuteman, a non-partisan political publication, wrote a letter of support to Hewitt on April 26.

In his letter, Smith called the Spartacists "a violent group whose sole purpose seems to be disrupting meetings, rallies, speakers, etc.," and said they tried to kill a Nicaraguan Contra leader when he spoke at Harvard University. Smith also said he resented that the group used his name in their defense.

Japanese culture heralded at UMass during Japan Week

By DANIELLE DOWLING
Collegian Staff

As throngs of students passed through the Campus Center concourse this week, many gathered at one particular table, mesmerized by the contents of its adjacent television screen.

The screen contained images of modern Japanese culture, replete with cartoons and game shows. This opportunity for many students to observe a culture different from their own was provided as part of Japan Week, an event sponsored by the Japan America Club to raise awareness of Japanese culture.

'The goal of our televised display was to expose students to Japanese television," said Tara O'Brien, president of the club. "In the past week we have shown musicals, historical programs, comedy, animation, and Japanese theatre. Although the students may not understand what is being said on the programs, the visuals speak for themselves."

Besides television programs, their table has sold such items as origami Japanese calligraphy and T-shirts. "The calligraphy has been selling very well," said Chris Parke, the club's events chair. "There's a mystique about it that attracts people."

The table has also provided a well of information about the club itself and their activities around and outside of Japan Week. Formed in the fall of 1989, the club boasts a membership of 100 with equal representation of those from the Japanese and American culture.

The official opening of Japan Week began with a speech delivered by Kensaku Hogen, the Consul General in Boston, on Monday night in Memorial Hall.

"We invited the Consul General to open our event because his philosophy reflects ours, which is to achieve a greater understanding between the Japanese and American cultures," O'Brien said.

But O'Brien felt the most interesting activity of the week was the Shakuhachi Flute Concert, showcasing the talents of Fraternity donates time, money to worthy community programs

By KEITH NICHOLSON
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts chapter of Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity has been very busy helping people this semester.

This week the brothers have turned their attention to the hearing impaired.

The brothers have donated a telecaption adaptor that provides closed-captioned viewing to the hearing impaired to Handicapped Student Affairs.

The adaptor, which cost approximately $1,000, was donated because, "the brothers did not think that Handicapped Student Affairs should have to lease such an important device from the University," PKA Co-Philanthropy Chair Mark DeOliveira said.

This semester the brothers have also helped the Red Cross — by exceeding by ten their goal of 60 pints of blood at a blood drive in the Campus Center held April 17.

Co-Philanthropy Chairman Spiros Vouriotis said, "we were very happy to exceed the goal for the blood drive because we are helping even more people."

The next philanthropic event the fraternity conducted was on April 22, in the streets around Southwest Residence Area.

Some 30 brothers took turns rolling a keg in a one-mile loop around Southwest. By rolling the keg 30 miles, the fraternity raised $400 for the Covenant House, a shelter for homeless children.

Vouriotis said: "The brothers had a great time rolling the keg and the best part is that we were helping homeless children at

Chancellor search postponed

BOSTON (AP) - The Board of Regents of Higher Education announced Thursday it will postpone its search for a new chancellor until January because the state failed to attract enough qualified minorities and women in a first-round search.

"If we had to proceed then all of our rhetoric about affirmative action would have been make to look appropriately foolish," said Board of Regents Chairman Paul Tsongas.

Interim Chancellor Randolph Bromery will remain in place until the board resumes its search next year. Bromery replaced former Chancellor Franklyn Jenifer, who left this year to become president of Howard University in Washington, D.C.

The Board of Regents was satisfied with the quality of applicants, but had no women and only one minority when it whittled down a list of applicants to the 10 most qualified people, Tsongas said.

The Board of Regents had an initial pool of about 50 applicants, including some who sent in resumes and others who were nominated. Of those, about 30 agreed to pursue the application process. The 10 most qualified applicants were narrowed from that list.

Tsongas said keeping Bromery has some advantages, especially with budget deliberations in the offing.

"He's known quantity on the campuses and on Beacon Hill," Tsongas said. "I guess we felt that whoever we would get would at best be as good as he is. The system needs stability given what's coming, given the budget, given the legislative look at the structure."

The state may also be able to attract more minority applicants once the gubernatorial race is over,. Tsongas said. "I suspect people applying in the next round are going to want to know who is the governor, what is the budget and what is the result of the legislative look at our structure."

Tsongas said he doubts recent comments by Jenifer about the state had anything to do with the dearth of qualified minority candidates who applied, because Jenifer made the comments after the cutoff date for applications.

Jenifer, who is black, said while he found no problem working in Massachusetts, there were pockets of racism in the state.

the same time."

The brothers of Pi Kappa Alpha have dedicated themselves to needy children, according to DeOliveira.

Throughout the semester, the brothers have been traveling to Springfield College every Wednesday to tutor eighth grade in a project called "I Have A Dream." The brothers try to help motivate the children to do better in school, said DeOliveira. Over the semester the program has become much like a Big Brother Program where the brothers and children have paired themselves together, DeOliveira said.

"It sounds like a lot of work, but the brothers enjoy getting to know the children," DeOliveira said. "All in all, the brothers of Pi Kappa Alpha have been busy helping worthy causes, but the reward we receive is worth twice the effort we put into it."

Lecture relates positive side of socialism

By ELIZABETH CHRISTOPHER
Collegian Correspondent

"Only under socialism can we make a better world," said Abe Cohen, who delivered a lecture titled "Is Socialism Dead," last night at the Bangs Community Center in Amherst.

The discussion was sponsored by the Gray Panthers, a national human interest organization started in 1970 in the interest of senior citizens' rights. Such issues as racism, ageism, sexism, national health care, fair housing, and union organization are among their top concerns.

Many in last night's audience felt that not enough was being done for 'the average citizen' under capitalism in this country.

One woman expressed her frustration: "I've lived for 100 years and I've seen the same problems — maybe we are worse off now, and I don't now what we can do about it."

More positive views were expressed as another audience member commented on work being done to solve problems of the abuse of women and children.

But many felt more steps must be taken for human rights, as they emphasized the need for a national health care bill, fair housing laws and free education.

The group agreed on the need for the socialist party in the United States.

One man suggested that socialist ideas have not been well articulated in this country. "Kids have been taught that capitalism is the 'only way' — they have no sense of alternatives and no envision of change," he said.

Cohen told the group that it's fine to discuss these issues, but it is also necessary to join coalitions and talk to trade unions to bring about change.

"We must not be afraid to speak out for what we believe," said Cohen.

Media manipulation of our bodies

Elizabeth Sturges

The human body in our consumer-oriented, media-manipulated society has become a commodity to sell products and an obsession for too many Americans, most of whom are women.

One out of five college women suffers from an eating disorder, a condition in which a person compulsively overeats then purges the body of food by vomiting or with laxatives (bulimia), or starves oneself altogether (anorexia).

These behaviors are vain attempts by a person to gain control over some aspect of his or her life or to numb an emotional pain and are largely personal problems having to do with one's personal history. Many people with eating disorders come from alcoholic backgrounds or are victims of sexual abuse.

Why then do so many people in our society suffer in the same way? Obsessions with food and body image, starvation and vomiting are not enjoyable experiences. They are indications of pain, of a dislike of and willingness to abuse the body.

Each day we are bombarded with hundreds of photographic images which companies spend million of dollars on to entice us to buy their products. We are confronted each day by so many of images (on billboards, on TV and in magazines) that we become desensitized to them, yet very few of us can avoid internalizing them.

What are these images? Most ads, regardless of what they are promoting, focus on the body in such a way that not only does the body become separate from the model that lives in it, but it gets divided into parts as well.

When we see an ad designed , as many are, in such a way that the first thing we notice are the model's thighs, then the thigh becomes the main content of the ad — and the person in the photograph ceases to be a person in the whole sense.

These images tell us how we should look and who we should be in order to be socially acceptable. For men, the ideal is tall, lean and muscular. For women, the ideal is basically the same, although voluptuousness is now more "in" than a few years ago.

There are several problems here. Firstly, we don't all look alike. And although due to biology there are more muscular, fatless men out there than women, not all men fit the latest style in body image either. This broad-shouldered, narrow-hipped, lean look is especially inappropriate for women whose bodies naturally maintain a certain amount of fat to nourish mother and child in case of pregnancy. The female body is also equipped with wide hips to safely bring a child into the world.

The smiling models who represent the "ideal" in physical beauty spend most of their time and energy maintaining their looks.

Only after the model has sculpted his or her body to "perfection" by whatever means necessary and having been placed under lights which conceal "flaws" and accentuate "assets" is the picture taken. Afterwards, in a studio, any amount of touch-up work can be done to the photograph including airbrushing to create the illusion of more muscle tone in a stomach, for example, or actual cutting away of a thigh to make it appear thinner.

Now the image is ready to be presented to us, the public, as an indicator of how we would look if we were really happy.

We must question the images presented to us in the media, question the motives behind them and decide for ourselves whether or not we will accept the attitudes therein. It is time for us, men and women to start treating ourselves and each other as selves and not as objects.

P.E.'s anti-Semitism undeniable

Saad Hopkins' "Public Enemy: brilliant controversy" (April 18) denies Public Enemy's (P.E.) anti-Semitism on the grounds that "P.E. has done more positive things for society than negative."

The anti-Semitic lyrics "Crucifixion . . ." have nothing to do with the slave trade, or events of this era.

The part entitled "Band no enemy without Griff" explores Griff's interview with the Washington Post, in which he said that Jews are responsible for the majority of wickedness that goes on across the globe. Then the biased media set up poor Professor Griff to be a hedonistic anti-Semite.

Calling that a set-up lends credit to Griff's destructive bigotry, promoting his lies.

Hopkins then claims Griff was only trying to say, "Instead of constantly looking at the glorious side of roles in Jewish history, look at some of their more questionable acts." Not only am I unconvinced of any connection between Judaism and the slave trade, but I find this most offensive of all.

Hopkins blames the Post for printing the truth because, "Certain stereotypes and fears. . . were only reinforced." This blame is anti-Semitic because it discounts the ability of Jews not to generalize P.E.'s anti-Semitism to all Black people.

Since no anti-Semitic article is complete without reference to Israel, the irrelevance of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict was dragged in: "I'm sick of Mordechai Levi telling me that I'm a traitor to my own people for not endorsing the wishy-washy policies of Israel, in light of their 'non-defensive' treatment toward Palestinians."

We should boycott P.E.'s zero-star, anti-Semitic trash, along with Guns 'n' Roses' racism, and risk the terrible "tragedy" it would be if they ever proved useful to humanity in any way.

'Asian Night' disgraces histories and cultures represented

Minu Sebastian

I am embarrassed at the Asian American Student Association's presentation of "Asian Night" last Friday night in the Campus Center. As an Asian-American woman who is just beginning to understand what it means to be a "person of color," I was infuriated at seeing myself exoticized and objectified.

What started off as "cultural entertainment" turned into an attempt to prove to the audience how "american" Asian students could be.

A substantial portion of the evening was dedicated to a talent show put on by students. First, a "Chopsticks Dance" which is a traditional Chinese dance was performed. There was also a "Kendo" Stick fighting demonstration and a "Puahone" which is a Hawaiian dance. There were several other performances as well.

But the culmination of the program and the event that took up the most time was the "Fashion Show." If the intent was to display traditional attire of Asian countries, then the show would have been refreshing, but this was obviously not the intent.

The lights were dimmed and people quieted down. With loud "club music" blaring in the background, the host of the show, an Asian-American woman, encouraged the audience to check out the legs of the models. The models posed in shorts, dresses and business attire.

The majority of the time in the fashion show was dedicated to Gap, J. Rich, Pelle Cuir and Esprit sport clothing modelled by Asian-American men and women. Afterwards, there was a brief display of traditional costumes.

Seeing fellow Asian-American women allowing themselves to be exoticized in a public show was degrading to the races they represent. Women all over the world are continually being objectified and treated as second-class citizens. And to see that stereotype perpetuated was insulting.

As an Indian woman I pride myself on having dark skin and dark hair, but to see myself exoticized in a public fashion show was humiliating and degrading. What the hell were these students thinking when they put on this show?

Going to a Asian night I was expecting to see a program dedicated to cultural pride and maintaining historical roots which is difficult in a society which constantly demeans and devalues us.

Instead what I saw was a lame attempt by many Asian-Americans at showing the UMass community how "american" they can be.

Unfortunately these students do not have the political or social consciousness to recognize how demeaning their acts are to the community as a whole. Furthermore, they have blatantly ignored the histories and roots of their cultures by focusing an "Asian Night" on modelling western-style clothing.

What we, as Asian-American students, need are reaffirmations of our cultural roots and identities to help us discover our true potential. Assimilation into the american culture will never give us the stability or security we deserve.

We need to recognize that our cultures are being trivialized in a society whose institutions are set up for a white, male and apathetic person. Instead of giving in to this mentality we should have the courage to collectively rise above it. That is what "Asian Night" should have focused on.

It was disgraceful to see Asian-Americans perpetuate the stigma they should be struggling against.

Questioning the thinking behind the notion of straight pride

Benjamin R. Eder

Straight pride is a response by certain members of the heterosexual community to gay pride, a well established concept within the gay rights movement.

"What is wrong with that?" you may ask. "Straight people have as much to be proud of as gays, lesbians and bisexuals, right?"

My response is "Yes," however there is an important distinction that must be made between gay and straight prides.

You see, gay pride is not really about being gay at all. It is much more than that.

I am not particularly proud that men happen to be the people with whom I fall in love; the gender of the person with whom I want to spend the rest of my life is not the source of my pride.

What I am proud of is retaining my integrity and expressing this love that I feel in an environment that is hostile to this expression. That is what gay pride is about.

It is about the people who have fought on all fronts for years to have homosexuality and bisexuality recognized as legitimate. It is pride in our accomplishments and in our resolve to continue fighting for the basic rights we deserve as humans.

Heterosexuals have never been persecuted because of their sexual orientation. They have never been victimized for expressing the love they feel for one another as have homosexuals and bisexuals.

Heterosexuality has long been regarded as the only legitimate expression of sexuality in our society, and heterosexuals are rewarded for this orientation through our society's institutions.

Certainly, heterosexuals have much to be proud of. Their individual achievements and their capacity to love are just two examples, but they should also be aware of how this pride has been the force behind the persecution of gays, lesbians and bisexuals throughout history.

I am not attempting to attack heterosexuality. I am simply questioning the thinking behind a notion like straight pride.

What exactly is it a response to? Certainly not the persecution of heterosexuals by the GLB community! Why then is it necessary?

Are these heterosexuals threatened by other groups attempting to assert their right to exist in this society peacefully and in a dignified manner? Are they concerned that homosexuals and bisexuals are going to take over and subject them to the same persecution we have experienced for years?

If that is the case, let me assure them that this will not happen. We are going to fight and rally until we have the legitimate place in this society to which we are entitled, and that is all we have ever claimed to want.

Perhaps the proponents of straight pride should evaluate where this sentiment is coming from. Perhaps reacting defensively to people who are looking only for a little breathing space and a life free of harassment is not what they want to be doing.

It is difficult to make room for others in a situation where one is comfortable and holds the power, but perhaps exploring whether one might not be just as comfortable in a society where the comfort and power are shared would not be a bad idea.

Perhaps it is time to move over and open oneself to the new people in town, and perhaps if one does these things one will really have something to be proud of.

Good grief, Chuck

Inexperience bogs down 'Charlie Brown'

By JOSH GALITSKY
Collegian Staff

You're a Good Man Charlie Brown
Student Union Ballroom
Tuesday, August 24

Little children, when growing up, are sometimes very very good and sometimes very very bad. Such was the way in adolescence and such was the way in my return to childhood while viewing You're a Good Man Charlie Brown.

When a child is bad, or good only half the time, everyone blames it on the upbringing by the parents. In the case of this production, at least some of the blame has to go to the casting and coordinating by the director.

The directing of the show was inexperienced and rather inconsistent. It ranged from wonderful to horrible and this reflected itself in most of the show's action. The original bits that director Lisa Eidlin added were lively and funny but she made some basic technical mistakes which caused some upstaging, lack of projection, and lack of characterization in her actors.

Although opening night rustiness and the curse of playing in the ugly Student Union Ballroom were in full effect; the major problem of this show was characterization — or lack of it.

Ellen Foley was outstanding and adorable as Lucy, boldly bulldozing her way on stage with crabby charisma. There was a lesson to be learned in watching Foley cook. She did amazing things with her character, both physically and vocally, which made Lucy both complex and enjoyable to watch. Whenever Foley was on stage, acting or singing, the audience was bursting with laughter.

David Almeida was splendid as Charlie Brown and became more likable as the show progressed. He added a unique boyish charm and humor to the usually pathetic Chuck and his singing voice was humble, soft and lilting.

Two other outstanding performers were Ed McCarthy as Shermy and Joe Mulligan as Woodstock. Although both had small parts, they both created distinct, larger-than-life characters that kept the audience howling.

The other characters, unfortunately were either severely under-developed, played inappropriately, or just plain terrible.

As far as being a musical, the inconsistency continued. The small but tight orchestra was polished and alive as were three of the numbers, "Happiness," "You're a Good Man...," and "The Book Report." Linus was cute during "My Blanket and Me," but, unfortunately, the full-cast songs fell short. Some of the solos made the audience whimper silently.

The first act was super, but the more we saw, the more we could sense that the show was riding on the shoulders of a few, mainly the Fantastic Four (Lucy, Shermy, Chuck and Woody). It seemed that some of the other performers were having so much fun jumping and dancing around, that they forgot they were still performing. The ones who didn't forget, included the rest of the audience in their celebration.

Potpourri of talent ends year on an up beat

By ANTONIA MAGUIRE

Beat Cafe
Hampden Theater
Wednesday, April 26

"Constructive relaxation," if there can be such a thing, is one of the many phrases which may be used to describe the Beat Cafe. Others may be "cool cabaret and coffee" or even "musical massage," the point being that the Beat Cafe, Wednesday night at Hampden Theater, was an evening of refreshing talent which oozed off the stage and plopped onto the laps of the coffee-sipping audience.

First up were the saxophone quartet Voices in the Dark whose selection of original and contemporary music, they communicated to their audience as much with their faces, as with their use of such features as the sporadic clapping which initialled their home-grown pieces.

Rick Hirsch, Jim Thomas, Dave Trenholm and Tony Beaudry, who make up the quartet, delighted their audience with the sounds of Rick Harris, Dizzy Gillespie and Charlie Parker, as well as their own.

The Fabulous Giggin' Bros. then took over the audience's attention with their theater of not only the absurd, but of the bizarre, zany and hilarious. They performed a selection of skits taken from their recently scripted improvisational play Goin' West. The trio, which consists of Will and Mike Gorman and Pete Farelly, launched into the realms of Nova-driving hippies and the pros and cons of being a harelip born and raised in a 48-seater school bus.

The guy sitting next to me described the music of the next performer, acoustic guitarist Ari Vais as "a brilliant eclectic pastiche of acoustic guitar styles;" but suffice to say that his songs were technically excellent, vocally stirring, at times moving and highly memorable. His Lou Reed-like voice, with lyrics at times part-spoken instead of sung, allowed for a subtle almost Billy Bragg-like humor to creep in between the strings he at times strummed like he was trying to keep them from running away, and at others tickled like they were a baby. Ari Vais, whose recent album, titled Aging Well, is available at Al Bums, had the kind of stage presence that said "I'm a really nice bloke, too."

The final act, the heavy post-punk band Rumblepuppy are probably best listened to in a smoky bar after several beers too many, when you can gyrate your body with as few inhibitions as possible. Their performance, unfortunately marred by a few technical problems, was one of energy and strength, rounding off an evening of musical and comic talent that should carry the Beat Cafe well into next semester.

Bad Girls, but good Scrawlers

By PAUL DeGEORGES
Collegian Correspondent

Smallmouth
Scrawl
Rough Trade

Like a Version
Two Nice Girls

Rough Trade has succeeded in signing "girl-groups," and Scrawl is one of the finest you will find. This charged trio of straightforward rockers kicks out an irresistably appealing combination of raw rock mixed with just enough bluegrass and country to make their music a unique, intriguing and unavoidably catchy experience. Smallmouth is the band's third album and includes nine (very) original songs and an interesting cover of an obscure Eurythmics tune. Aside from the music, which often sounds vaguely like Sonic Youth (yet far more accessible), Scrawl's vocals really catch one's attention. Over a crunchy guitar sound, booming bass and heavy drums transcends lead singer Marcy May's beautifully forceful voice. "Light a match, burn it down/Go drink Johny Walker." Sparse, simple and unpretentious songs about life, love and drinking make up a tone which ranges from angry to melancholy. This is an ardently earnest band.

Despite careful orchestration, Smallmouth has a completely spontaneous sound which makes it a thoroughly enjoyable album.

On the other extreme is Texas-based Two Nice Girl's EP Like A Version. It is a compilation of country-fied covers of Bad Company's "I Feel (Like Makin') Love" and the Carpenter's "Top of the World," and a dreadfully jazzy version of the theme song to the Speed Racer cartoon of the late '60s which simply left me nonplussed. Aside from the one original, the mildly amusing country ballad, "I Spent My Last $10 (On Birth-Control and Beer)," the only thing of interest in this collection is an ethereal country-tinged version of Sonic Youth's "Cotton Crown."

Albums are rated on a one to five star basis, with five stars being the best.

Folknoise from Cordelia

By LINDA WOODS
Collegian Staff

Until recently, you could have called Cordelia's Dad one of the area's best kept musical semi-secrets. Even though their core group of fans was always willing to praise the band to the sky, Cordelia's Dad remained a band with a rumor as their reputation. What was this rumor? That Cordelia's Dad might be hands down the most exciting band to come out of the Valley. At long last, the rumor has been transformed to reality.

Cordelia's Dad's self-titled debut LP was released this week on Okra/Rough Trade Records. Guitarist Tom King says, "We certainly have hopes for this record. It'll be distributed all through the U.S. and Europe, too."

Cordelia's Dad is clearly one of the area's most impressive independent label debuts. King admits, "I guess you could call it pretty decent."

The album was recorded and mixed under adverse conditions over three nights last August at Fort Apache Studios in Roxbury — one of the murder capitals of the U.S. "The studio was located in a box factory and at night they had guard dogs roaming around the place," recalls King. "So it was a little scary coming in and out. It was the only time we ever fought over who would get to carry the heavy equipment."

Cordelia's Dad calls their music "folknoise." Singer and bassist Tim Eriksen explains, "We came up with the word 'folknoise' because it seemed we had to have something to call it and that seemed as good as anything else. What it basically means is that we play songs from the oral folk traditions of Britian and the U.S., but because of when and where we grew up, we have to make a lot more noise going about it than other people usually do."

Although the band draws their material from folk roots, their interpretation of these songs is far from "traditional." Cordelia's Dad is carrying on the oral tradition by bringing these surviving songs into an authentic musical context. They don't put on folkie airs. They play music that is part of their personal traditions. Eriksen's background is in hardcore and South Indian classical music. King comes from funk bands in St. Louis and a stint with lounge piano playing. Irvine's experience includes extensive jazz training and touring Canada with a country and western band. Now, aren't you just a little bit curious as to how they approach "Scarborough Fair?"

Cordelia's Dad returns to the Iron Horse on Monday, April 30 to play an album release concert. The all-ages show starts at 7 p.m. Admission is $4.

The best and worst of metal

If an album A) has a good looking girl depicted in a sexist fashion on its cover; B) contains no lyrics; and C) causes me to experience hair envy when I look at the band's photo; then I am certain I will detest its contents before I even listen to it.

Unfortunately, the latest release from the Arizona commercial metal outfit, Icon, meets with these criteria. I honestly tried to listen to what they had to offer. However, as they met with my criteria for the appearance of an awful album, they followed through with the delivery. Plainly speaking, Right Between the Eyes is a rotten piece of commercial tripe.

The biggest problem I have with the album is that it's overproduced. Not one song has any bite to it. The sound is fluffy and airy, like a Three Muskateers bar.

But this is a stale Three Muskateers, because, like most groups belonging to the commercial metal genre, there is nothing new to this album. It has your typical love ballads from hell. The singer sounds like a cross between Don Dokken and David Coverdale. The harmonies, melodies and tempos are suspiciously similar to work composed by groups like Bon Jovi, Van Halen and Whitesnake.

Right Between the Eyes is the comeback album for Icon. After releasing two "critically acclaimed" albums in the early '80s on Capitol, they experienced personnel and label troubles and faded into the sunset for awhile. I wish they had stayed there, at least until they came up with something original. And I truly wish that the music of their genre would die a horrible, nasty death. I know that's not exactly the nicest thing to say, but it segues very nicely into the next item.

What is life without death?

If you ask an existentialist philosopher, you would probably get a complicated answer. So why not ask a thrasher? He or she would probably tell you that life without death would be a drab life devoid of the thrashing foursome from Florida known as Death.

The title track, Spiritual Healings, is the best track on the album with the most original harmony and melody lines that I have heard in awhile. The levels of energy and musicianship are fantastic. And most important, the lyrics are intelligent.

I have but two problems. The first is one common with most speed/thrash music. The segues from one tempo to another, especially during guitar solos, sound a bit awkward. It's not too terrible but enough to make me cringe. The second complaint has to do with lead singer, Chuck Schuldiner's voice. It's definitely different and sometimes very effective. However, he often sounds like he gargles with a cheese grater and this unfortunately can be annoying at times.

These petty complaints aside, Spiritual Healing, is an impressive piece of vinyl.

Albums are ranked on a one to five star rating, with five stars being the best.

Gregson and Collister, more than a folk duo, play the Iron Horse

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

Don't call Clive Gregson and Christine Collister a folk duo.

"Once they see you with an acoustic guitar, they label you as folk," laments Gregson, who writes all the duo's songs.

Sure, Gregson and Collister met in a folk club in Manchester, England. And yes, they are former members of Richard Thompson's (founder of Fairport Convention) band. But no, they are not a folk duo.

All you have to do is listen to Gregson's fast and furious guitar on "Standing in Your Shadow," "(Don't Step In) My Blue Suede Shoes," and the Elvis Presley cover, "Tryin To Get to You," off their latest album, the Gregson produced A Change in the Weather (Rhino), and you'll hear that this duo is more than just a couple of folkies.

"What we do is more of a pop, rock, jazz, blues, country, R and B kind of thing," says Gregson. "Labels are difficult, but I suppose we are a rock act if we are anything. I suppose my two biggest musical influences in many respects were Elvis and Bruce Springsteen."

"My Blue Suede Shoes" is a tribute to both of Gregson's idols, and how the press has tried to rob them of any shred of dignity. Of Elvis, Gregson sings, "His story never ends/It stays alive in gossip/Written by his so-called friends."

Of Springsteen, Gregson writes that while the press prints lies about him, "No responsibility/Could ever weigh so much/As to be the man there at the top/Who tries to stay in touch/With what must pass for daily life/For the hungry and the poor."

While Gregson's sound has more of a bluesy or rockabilly feel, the gentle vocals of Collister bring a new dimension and balance to the album. Sounding more than a bit like Fleetwood Mac's Christine McVie, her vocals float over ballads such as "Blues on the Run," and rip through the torch holding gospel/jazz sound of "Tryin' to Get to You."

This is quite a departure from the duo's previous album, Mischief. As Gregson says, "It's more a development of the previous record. It's more hard-edged than anything we've done before. If you get labeled as a folk act, it kind of puts a limit on what you can achieve."

Tonight at the Iron Horse, there will be no band, no wires, no amps; just two people acoustically playing their songs about love and relevant social issues.

Clive Gregson and Christine Collister perform an all-ages show tonight at 10 p.m.

Mediocre rap from Griff and Dance Squad

By JON DRUKMAN
Collegian Correspondent

If intentions were the only relevant criteria for judging records, then the Professor Griff album would be a winner. Unfortunately, records have to be judged on how good the music is, and in that department Griff falls short.

You all know by now that Professor Griff used to be in Public Enemy until he made some nasty remarks about how Jews were responsible for the "majority of wickedness" in the world to a Washington Post reporter. Well, after it transpired that one of the key reasons for his controversial remarks was that he was pissed off at Public Enemy and was trying to wreck them, PE did the only sensible thing and gave him the boot. He was then quietly allowed to rejoin the group, but has since left on his own accord.

But this is all incidental. The main thing here, and in other rap albums, is the music. How good is it? Well, I've heard worse and I've heard better. It's pretty dull in most places. Despite Griff's published remarks of hatred for Public Enemy producer Hank Shocklee, the Griff album sounds like it was trying to sound just like a Shocklee production. Of course, nobody but Shocklee can do Shocklee right, so it comes off pretty lame. One song even uses the exact same Sly and the Family Stone riff that Shocklee used for "Coolin' in Cali," by the 7A3. The Griff version doesn't use it anywhere near as well, however.

Elsewhere, you've got an attempt at heavy metal rap on "Suzi Wants To Be A Rock Star," which also features a terrible sung chorus by Griff, who claimed in Spin that he was trying to sound like Steve Perry (lead singer of Journey). You'd think he could've picked someone a little more. . .well, inspirational, to imitate!

DISC JUNKIE

You can't fault Griff's lyrics; the rapping is all pretty passable, even though Griff doles out most of the rap duties to his "Last Asiatic Disciples." The overall impression though is that this record is just kind of mediocre. Nothing really stands out and makes you want to listen to it more than once. It's an interesting curiosity for those who must delve into all aspect of the Public Enemy phenomenon, but not much else.

Meanwhile, over in Amsterdam, they're apparently all talking about Urban Dance Squad. With extreme trepidation I gave it a listen. I was pleasantly surprised.

The album, titled Mental Floss For The Globe, kicks off with a ripping fast half rap track called "Fast Lane." The verses remind me of Public Enemy, but the choruses are strictly Red Hot Chili Peppers. It's not a bad combination at all, actually. They've actually got a band playing drums, bass and guitar, plus a DJ who scratches a little and cuts in other riffs and beats. Quite a unique combination. Unfortunately, after this promising opening, it's all downhill. The next two cuts, "No Kids" and "Deeper Shade of Soul" are slow moving and boring. The pace picks up again with "Brainstorm on the UDS" but unfortunately the album never regains the incredible dynamic assault of the opening cut.

It's really a shame to see an innovative idea squandered this way, but maybe they'll improve in the future, or another band will try this idea and have more success. As this album is such a mixed bag, I can't recommend it wholeheartedly, but if you're desperate for a new Red Hot Chili Peppers-like fix, then you could do a lot worse than to check Urban Dance Squad out.

Local filmmaker screens his award-winning movie

By NICK OSTIS
Collegian Correspondent

Named the Outstanding Independent Film of 1990 by the New England Film Festival, Hampshire College professor and filmmaker Abraham Ravett's Everything's For You will be screened Monday night at 8:30 p.m. at the Northampton Center for The Arts.

The 58-minute film, which utilizes a variety of media-family photographs, 16mm home movies (shot from 1974-1978 and 1984-1989), computer and animated graphics and the only known existing footage shot in the Lodz Ghetto — is a dedication to his father, Chaim Ravett, a survivor of both Lodz and the Auschwitz concentration camps.

Ravett explains, "This film is an attempt after all those years, since he died in 1979, to try to come to terms with the relationship we had; but probably more than anything else to try to understand what it means to be a parent in context of my being a father. Of course, the framework of the film is his experiences in the war as a survivor and what that meant and what impact that had on my life and probably my kids as well."

That impact is undoubtedly strong, if not omnipotent, because all three of Ravett's previous films deal with aspects of the Holocaust, too. Indeed, this film is a vehicle for Professor Ravett to purge himself of a life cloaked in forbidding secrets and silence.

Not unlike John Lennon's song "Mother," in which he attempts to reconcile his painful abandonment, this film asks of his father a multitude of questions for which he never expects answers.

We hear Ravett's pleading inquiries and statements posed repeatedly and see the words on the screen: "Why didn't you ever tell me anything? How did you do it, Pop?'

In several clips, his elderly dad, shirtless, world-weary and enervated, briefly answers one haunting questions, sometimes in Yiddish, looking away from the camera unwilling to fully disclose the horrible details of his harrowing past.

This film is not bound by a traditional narrative sequence or sensibility.

"The forms, rhythms, pulses and silences in the film are as important as the most representational images," he says. "I utilize these combinations, these elements to speak as profoundly and directly, I hope, as any kind of verbal language or anything that a person might say directly."

Hampshire Graduate Emily Hubley's animation scenes recall three of Ravett's indelible adolescent memories of his father's intensity, intolerance and sensitivity owing to his unforgettable past.

Ravett's children make several appearances which serve to balance the somber tone with some levity. In one scene, Ravett changes his son Chaim's diaper while the boy plays a flute. Later, at the kitchen table Ravett's mom urges his daughter, Sarah, to be silent while eating, to which the little girl cheerfully responds, "Oh, I always talk at dinner."

This film is a posthumous gift of love from son to father, but just as importantly a legacy from a father to a new generation and beyond.

Admission to the screening is $2. For more information, call the Center at 584-7327.

Wild adventures on the Amazon

By NICK OSTIS
Collegian Correspondent

Running The Amazon
Joe Kane
Alfred A. Knopf

In August of 1985 ordinary Joe Kane was tending to his consumers' service column for the San Francisco Chronicle in his office. About six months later he had become, with absolutely no prior experience, one of only two men ever to suffer, savor and successfully negotiate the world's largest river, the 4,200 mile long Amazon (or "The Great Speaker"). Running The Amazon, an Indiana Jones-style, true-life account of that odyssey, is his story.

Kane began the journey searching for its source trekking through the 18,000 feet high Peruvian Andes. Although he was stupefied by some of the planet's most breathtaking scenery, the relentless weather (bone-chilling wind, barely navigable fog, blinding snow and rain and scorching sun), torturous trail, freeze-dried rations and general deprivations, combined to make life very difficult indeed. The journey by foot alone is enough to coerce most mortals to surrender.

The myth and history of this isolated region, the terror and danger of the advance (both in and out of the river) and the interaction of the voyagers are vividly woven into an engrossing narrative.

On the trail in Yauri: "As in most poor Latin American Villages, it (the church) was ostentatious well beyond the meager resources of its flock. Brittle shacks huddled around it like orphans clutching at the skirts of a wealthy matron. In front of the church a man labored shoulder deep in a sandy trench digging up old graves. Stacked behind him, in a neat row, were a dozen skulls."

Kane balances spine-tingling adventure with just enough exotic historical data and arcane folklore: "The spanning of the Apurimac River, with four bridges woven entirely of hammered grass, played a critical role in their (the Incas) subsequent frenetic westward expansion. When the Spanish conquistadors arrived a century later, they regarded these bridges — their cables, 200 feet long and as thick as a man's body, were capable of supporting entire armies of animals and men — as among the New World's most awe-inspiring sights."

Or regarding the sexual folklore of the Amazon: "A dolphin eye, dried and grated into a woman's food, will drive her mad with desire. . . Intercourse with a female dolphin is so intense a man will die from it."

Initially invited along to write the story as one of a crew of nine after he had raised funds from a publisher and contributed them to the expedition, Kane joins his colleagues in the river. Within the first few hundred miles, the river has nearly claimed every one of them at least once in conditions like these : "Rolling, mud brown, flecked with frothy white whirlpools and swirling currents, she charged along at a good ten knots, roaring like gravel falling out of a dumptruck and carrying a flotilla of uprooted trees the size of small tugboats. On the far banks, perhaps 400 yards away, hundred foot chunks of earth collapsed into the river in silent explosions, taking with them fifty foot trees that shuddered as they fell."

Moreover, there is the Amazon jungle ("The bush seemed to be one many-limbed, conniving beast.") and its inhabitants — maddening malaria-carrying mosquitoes, snakes, scorpions, cacti and the candiru, "a tiny parasitic catfish that pins itself inside the human urethra with nonretractable spines. Once in place it must be cut out."

In addition, when they camped in shanty towns or on beaches or booked hotels, there were thieves, thugs, cocaine industry underlings and once, the Shining Path, Maoist revolutionaries of Peru, to outwit. Of course, on the other hand, the succor of beneficent and benevolent village and urban guides along the shore played a major role in their being refreshed and replenished enough to carry on.

Despite the aforementioned potentially fatal perils, it is a near mutiny against Dr. Offendahl, the deranged visionary and architect of the trip, that almost prevents Kane and the indomitable Piotr Chmielinsk from making history.

In separate kayaks, Kane and Piotr eventually navigate the last 3,000 miles by themselves with the aid of two crew members on shore who later hired a boat with a Brazilian captain to escort them to his bed. (Due to prior commitments and health problems, the other five move on at different junctures.)

The Herculean demands of the expedition certainly would have broken most humans. That they completed their goal is due to the tenacious perseverance of Piotr, who emerges through the text as no less than a Ulysses or Atlas. What were they up against? Said J. Calvin Giddings in 1974, after almost immediately abandoning upon sight one hazardous canyon, "Navigation would be suicide."

Carefully researched, with detailed maps and three dozen photographs, written with generosity of spirit, reverence for life, an eye and ear for detail and a tone of humorous and ironic understatement, "Running The Amazon" is a magnificent achievement.

Clearly, there is more than one hero from San Francisco named Joe.

Ravi Shankar mesmerizes at Fine Arts Center

By DAKKAN ABBE
Collegian Correspondent

Ravi Shankar
Fine Arts Center
Friday, April 24

Last Friday night at the Fine Arts Center, we as an audience were treated to a rare and privileged concert by the master Indian sitar player, Ravi Shankar. Shankar appeared with his son, who also plays the sitar, a drummer and a tamborua player.

The music is played in a form called a raga, which is the classical music form of India. Though the raga has a specific overall structure to it, over 90 percent of the music is actually improvised.

Each raga is keyed into one of nine different emotions and different times of the day, so the mood of the piece is supposed to reflect that particular combination after which it is named. After the initial section, the tabla drummer enters, laying in rhythmic fills completely outside of what most of us consider "keeping time." By playing the drum with his fingertips, the drummer is able to play incredibly fast rhythms and various different sounds.

Watching Ravi's hands fly all over the sitar, the audience was mesmerized, then turning to the tabla drummer, we were simply stunned. Without a doubt I've never seen of heard a drummer as fast as Kumar Bose in my entire life. We watched his hands in awe, then finally accepted that it was simple beyond our conception.

Indian ragas are spiritual pieces and as such the playing of them is as much a devotional act as a musical event for the players. The music is both elevating and meditational, its long development wraps around you then leads you up to the point of epiphany, where you are simply unable to turn away. The concert was like an incredible journey to a land that I have never been to, but never the less appeared to me when I closed my eyes. Lavish temples and wandering mystics became real as the aroma of real burning incense filled my nostrils and the majestic, magical music of the 700-year-old sitar washed over my spiritually impoverished body.

I'll see you in Kashmir.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A willingness to move with the times helps you to clinch a major financial victory. Ask close friends and relatives to assist you in putting over an important deal. Romance thrives.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A business trip you take today could bring big profits and a new friendship. People who work in the background play a major role in your success. Show your appreciation in tangible ways.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A meeting of the minds makes this a highly profitable and enjoyable day. You are ready to advance a career goal. Guard against making an impetuous decision. Romance puts you in a jolly mood.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You are in an affectionate frame of mind and find that love can be electrifying. Your loyalty to an old friend will be repaid. Plan to visit a close relative during the weekend.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The atmosphere at work becomes more congenial. New alliances can be forged. Important papers demand your undivided attention. You become actively involved in community affairs because of a loved one.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You enjoy a greater feeling of security than in the recent past. Romance is a large part of this evening's plan. Be careful not to promise more than you want to deliver.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Stick to a well-planned schedule at work. A small windfall brightens your outlook. Long-range business goals can be helped by certain social activities. Romance is delightful.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Insights gained through observation are the key to greater business success. A letter or phone call is a source of cheer. Loved one may behave in a puzzling fashion. Play a waiting game.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A web of confusion could put you in an embarrassing position. Be discreet or you may jeopardize your standing with a loved one. Avoid becoming involved with a trendy new social group.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Stick to your priorities today and make every minute count. Mate or partner is receptive to your plans. Be cautious when evaluating a stranger's actions. The financial picture improves.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Self-promotion may be essential where your career is concerned. A quiet work environment is excellent for tackling complex projects. Double-check all figures. Loved one shares a happy secret.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Look forward to a hectic but profitable day. Pace yourself accordingly. Finish paperwork before leaving the office. An evening social engagement will get the weekend off to a flying start.

the Atlantic 10 Conference, travel to Pennsylvania to face Temple for four crucial games tomorrow (in Boyertown, Pa.) and Sunday (Philadelphia). Three wins would clinch an A-10 postseason bid for the Minutemen. Both doubleheaders begin at noon.

UMass tied yesterday's game with three runs in the bottom of the seventh, starting with Dan Biagini's leadoff home run — his first of the year. Mike Tobin was next hit by a pitch, stole second and advanced to third on an error, scoring on Steve Corradi's sacrifice fly.

Ian Torres followed with a single, chasing Hartford pitcher Joe Velez. The Hawks replaced him with Kenny Klee, who gave up a single to Brian Bright and walked Derek Dana and Glenn DiSarcina to force home a run.

But almost as suddenly as UMass tied the game, Hartford took the lead right back. It was the Hawks' big guns who did the damage in the top of the eighth, as Bob Nenna (.299, 23 RBIs) led off by sending UMass reliever Dan O'Leary's first pitch to right field for a double.

One out later, Joe Bellino drew a walk to set the table for outfielder Mike Scrapchansky, who sent one over the fence for three of his five RBIs on the day. As things turned out, those runs were the game-winners.

UMass scrapped out a run in the bottom of the eighth, as Tobin singled, stole second and came home on another Corradi fly ball. After Drew Comeau singled in the ninth and his running replacement, Dave Edwards scored on DiSarcina's two-out single (his third RBI), there was hope.

But Gary Gallagher got Lou Olivieri to fly out to center, nailing down the win for Klee and earning himself his first save. O'Leary (1-2) took the loss for the Minutemen.

With Temple looming on the horizon, UMass coach Mike Stone put yesterday's loss in perspective.

"We have to forget about it and stay positive," Stone said. "We swung the bats well today . . . we were in a position to win, but we let up too many runs."

The Minutemen fell into a hole early, as Hartford parlayed three hits and an error into seventh in the second, five of them earned. Jim Telgheder pitched well for the first inning, but started to fall behind Hartford's hitters in the second, hurting his cause.

Hartford's highlight in the second was a homer by Mike Kostrzewa. Scrapchansky also chipped in with a two-run double.

Corradi, who leads the team with 39 runs scored, accounted for UM's first two scores. He singled to right-center off Hawk starter Mike Morhardt in the first, moved to second on a Torres single and scored when Comeau smacked a single to deep center.

Corradi scored again in the third when he singled, stole second and scored on Bright's sacrifice fly to left.

UMass chipped away for three more runs in the sixth. Bright took first on a fielder's choice and moved to second on Comeau's single. Derek Dana knocked in Bright with another single, and DiSarcina followed with another single to score Dana and chase Morhardt from the mound.

It was certainly a day for hitters. The two teams combined for 24 hits (UMass 13, Hartford 11) and went through nine total pitchers. Yet, UMass got strong outings from Rob Graziano (four innings, three hits), Brian Sheehan (retired both batters he faced) and Scott Meaney (scoreless ninth).

Other UM events

There is plenty of other stuff going on this weekend in the UMass sports world — except, none of it is happening here.

Anyway, the women's track teamn finishes up its three-day run at the Penn Relays, and will jump back into it Sunday when it travels to Fitchburg for the Fitchburg Invitational.

The men's tennis team is at the New England Championships beginning today, while the men's track team jaunts to Providence on Sunday to take part in the Brown Invitational.

been hitting in the clutch (15 RBIs).

Cherie DellAnno, the model of stability behind the plate this season, is second in the conference with 19 RBI's and has one homer which is good enough to tie her with four others for the conference lead.

When an injury forced Jen Devlin out for the season it created a tremendous void in the Minutewomen pitching staff. That void was aptly filled by freshman Darlene Claffey. Claffey (6-3) is fifth in the league in strikeouts and 11th in the league with a 1.83 ERA. And she's only going to get better.

The list of players responsible for the success is a continuous one. Sheri Kuchinskas was nominated for A-10 player-of-the-week and Chris Collins had 15 RBIs.

They're a good team and here's what they're up against:

The University of Connecticut (30-4), currently ranked 15th in the nation, lost a game to UMass earlier in the season and should be frothing at the mouth to play the Minutewomen again. Which is fine because UMass would like nothing better then to knock the Huskies off one more time.

Rutgers is a perfect 10-0 in A-10 play so far this season and this will be the Minutewomen's first look at the Lady Knights. Laurie (you may have already have won $10,000,000) McMahon leads Rutgers with a .330 avg. and Carla Camino and Penny Rosario are also batting over .300.

But the Lady Knights know that their strength lies in pitching. Rutgers' team ERA is an impressive 1.29.

Penn State record is 22-14 and 8-4 in the A-10. The Nittany Lions are led by Joyce Tinner, who has been terror at the plate for opposing pitcher with a .345 avg., nine doubles and 25 RBIs, will be on Sortino's mind this weekend.

The Nittany Lions are also impressive on the mound, sporting a 1.54 team ERA.

Georgia State and their 35-20 record will also be in the hunt for the tourney championship. The team ERA is 1.10 but their weakness is batting. With an avg. of .212 they will have to work extra hard to manufacture runs.

Kent State (26-4) should be one of the other teams that stand a chance of winning this thing. The Lady Flashes have the best ERA in the tourney (0.59) but split with Penn St. which makes one wonder who they played their other games against.

The University of Detroit (23-14), Boston College (18-13-1) and Adelphi (18-11) all have an outside chance at winning the tourney but Detroit is in the middle of a slump, losing five of their last seven, and B.C. and Adelphi lack the overall depth to scare anybody, yet.

This is a weekend none of these softball teams will be able to sleep through; and for the Minutewomen, it is a weekend to get up for.

Haragsim.

"The key to our faceoffs is the wing guys — guys like Hugh O'Callaghan, [Tim Soudan] and Jim Kushner," Garber said. "But sometimes they get in too tight."

That happened frequently against Harvard, and the Gorillas got caught watching on numerous occasions while the Crimson blew down the field for fast break goals.

Another problem against Harvard was passing, a glitch that Garber hopes can clear itself up.

"If we execute our throwing and catching, our offensive strength should carry us," he said.

On a different note, tomorrow's game will be the first of the season for the Gorillas under the lights, and just the second on artificial turf. In the past, UMass hasn't fared too well after dark — last year's 11-7 sleepwalk at Boston College being a good example.

"The night bothers me more than the turf," Garber said. "Not too many fields have lighting good for lacrosse. Two years ago down there, the first half-hour was tough. At dusk, you couldn't see the ball."

Originally, the game was scheduled for 1 p.m., but Rutgers switched it to avoid conflict with its spring football game. Then again, maybe it was a ploy to gain an advantage over the Gorillas.

Whatever the case, it'll be just one of many obstacles UMass will have to overcome if it has any hopes of making the playoffs.

Gazelles can't manage a happy ending

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

This was one game where the result just didn't matter.

Losing is not fun. But not being able to play a game that you have loved for much of your life is even worse. After yesterday's loss to Dartmouth College, 18-8, the players on the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team walked away from the field with the realization that they may never play lacrosse for UMass again.

Because of budget cuts at UMass, the women's lacrosse program has been suspended indefinitely after yesterday's game.

"Winning and losing didn't mean anything," said UMass coach Patti Bossio, who will leave UMass after this year.

"Reality just kind of set in. It has been a season of frustration with the program being dropped."

Yesterday's loss dropped the Gazelles to 4-10 on the year. Again, another statistic that just doesn't seem to matter. UMass could have won the national championship this year. But the program still would have been dropped.

The players knew going into the season that the program was going to be dropped, which made each game harder to play in. Their hearts just couldn't have been in this one.

"We could have just as easily went 0-14," Bossio said. "I really admire [the Gazelles'] courage and how they faced this entire season through all the adversity. It was an emotional roller coaster."

Bossio tried to use the fact that this was the last game that may be ever played at UMass to psyche her team up for the game but it just did not work.

"We tried to use that emotion to get up for the game but I think it might have just had the reverse effect," Bossio said.

It was the conditions in Hanover, N.H. that ended up having a big effect on the game. The heat beating down on the field actually gave the Big Green the advantage.

Bossio did not have many players available on her bench with injuries and attack Sue Murphy, her leading scorer, thrown out of the game for a dangerous check in the second half. Dartmouth kept subbing in fresh players to match the fatigued Gazelles.

The game was really over at halftime with Dartmouth up 13-5.

"They had two kids we couldn't stop," Bossio said. "The heat got to a couple of our kids and I just didn't have anyone to put in."

UMass could not hold off Dartmouth's Holly Allen (six goals) or Judy Parish (seven goals). UMass goaltender Karen Pierce had an uncharacteristic bad game in net. The Big Green got six goals on free position shots, which usually just does not happen to Pierce.

And on the offensive end, the Gazelles just could not generate much offense with the exception of Liz Hoye who scored two goals and one assist.

"In the first half we only had eight shots," Bossio said. "If we would have had more shots, we would have scored more goals."

Their hearts just couldn't have been in it, though. Not with all that's happened over the past few months.

Baseball falls short against Hartford, 11-10

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Correspondent

When a comeback results in a win, that win is sweeter than any average win. But when that comeback falls short, the loss is just as bitter as a win would be sweet.

The University of Massachusetts baseball team came back from a six-run deficit to tie the University of Hartford, 8-8, only to fall just short, 11-10 yesterday at Lorden Field.

Gorillas head to Rutgers for tough (K)night game

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Don't count the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team out of this year's postseason party just yet.

Many felt the Gorillas may have seen their chance to sneak into the party disappear Wednesday afternoon with their 18-15 loss to Harvard. But given the events that have transpired over the last 24 hours (see accompanying story), anything is still possible.

Of course, it will all probably be tossed out the window for good if the Gorillas don't beat Rutgers tomorrow (7:30 p.m. at Piscataway, N.J.).

"The problem with going down there is both teams need to win this game to stay in the NCAA playoff picture," said UMass coach Dick Garber.

Rutgers is 7-3 and ranked 12th in the nation, but got blasted by Syracuse, 22-8 last Saturday. The Scarlet Knights are sliding down the ladder at the moment, which doesn't fare bode come tourney selection time. A win tomorrow would seing the momentum in the other direction.

Meanwhile, a UMass win would be its first over a ranked team this season.

"I would say this is an even-Steven game," Garber said. "Their game against St. John's was very similar to ours (both won, 16-11). The match-ups are incredible. But they have some major league wins that we don't have."

For instance, wins over perennial lax powers Navy and Johns Hopkins and up-n-coming Penn State, among others.

However, Rutgers has dropped a bit since losing attackman Andy DiCicco for the season to a knee injury.

"He's a dominator, maybe like a [Jim] McAleavey," Garber said. "If we lost McAleavey, it would be a helluva loss."

The Knights have tried to make up for it in other areas. Picking up the slack have been midfielder Greg Rinaldi (42-11-53), and attackman Steve Luciano (22-26-48). In goal, John Schmunk was having a good season until getting torched by Syracuse.

Last season (a 13-10 UMass win), Rutgers got out to a quick lead behind ball-control play, paced mainly by their faceoff strength. Mike Yarusso has taken over the job from Lou Fusilli, who ran the Gorillas into the ground last year, and Yarusso has won over 60 percent of his draws.

But UMass has been doing a much better job on faceoffs this season with Vin D'Angelo, Joe Flynn and Eugene

Brown game on; BC now Monday

The question is: Will the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team ever get to play Boston College at home?

Originally, UMass was supposed to play the Eagles Tuesday at 3 p.m at The Hill. But this is where it gets messy. Pay close attention.

The April 4 meeting with Brown was postponed because of rain. Both parties haggled for a couple of weeks, and it became clear that the only days they could play were next Wednesday (May 2) or Thursday.

Thursday was fine for UMass, but Brown is playing a big Ivy Leaguer against Cornell next Saturday and wants a couple of days to rest. (Is this starting to sound like a soap opera?)

How about Wednesday? Well, UMass was supposed to play Boston College Tuesday. So UMass called Chestnut Hill. BC said "fine, we'll play Monday . . . if you come down here."

Hence, the new schedule looks like this: Monday at Boston College (at 7 p.m.); Wednesday at Brown (time to be determined today); Sunday at Syracuse at 4 p.m.

"Brown was more important to us. We had to bite the bullet," said UMass coach Dick Garber.

Last year, rain forced the BC game to the wonderful AstroConcrete of BC's Alumni Stadium. Ditto for '87. The Gorillas thought this year they'd finally would get the Eagles in Amherst.

But Garber doesn't mind the change of venue.

"They're doing us a favor [by moving to Monday]," he said.

Football team to face alumni

The University of Massachusetts football team will be holding its annual spring football game tomorrow at 1 p.m. at Gladchuk Field (located outside Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium, just behind E Lot).

But for the first time, this year's spring game will feature the current UMass team against a group of football alumni.

Among those players who will be returning are all-time leading UM rusher Garry Pearson and several recent UMass alumni. Among the bigger names, Dave Palazzi and Tim Bryant both return to renew their never-ending battle for the quarterback spot.

Also playing for the alumni are this year's seniors: Chip Mitchell, George Karelas, Joe Cullen, Steve Olson, Pat Phillips, Sean Cummings and Garrick Amos.

The players to watch though, are the current Minutemen — the ones who will be taking the field when the season opens next fall.

Softball to be tested at Penn State

RING . . . RING . . . RING;
Hello?
Good afternoon, this is Central Connecticut with your wake up call. Have a good day.

Tuesday afternoon the University of Massachusetts softball team (19-13) got a wake-up call in the form of a 4-2 loss to the Central Conn. Blue Devils.

"That was one big kick in the butt." said Coach Elaine Sortino. "We were flat."

In the long run the loss might just have been what the doctor ordered as UMass woke up in time to slaughter the Blue Devils in the second game, beating Central Conn. about the head and body by the score of 10-2. And it could have been more.

"It took a tremendous amount of character to bounce back within 20 minutes," Sortino said.

There will be no time for anymore wake-up calls this season for the Minutewomen. They are currently in the middle of a race for the best record in the A-10 and this weekend they will face some of the best softball teams on the East Coast as they travel South to take part in the sixth-annual Penn State Tournament.

UMass is four games behind Rutgers in the A-10 and they will also be at the tourney.

Host Penn State is tied with UMass and the University of Rhode Island for second in the division. This will be a big weekend for softball.

The Minutewomen, despite the loss to the Blue Devils, have been playing very well lately, winning eight of their last nine including HUGE wins over UConn and Temple.

"Were in the thick of things." said Sortino.

Several players are responsible for the success of the Minutewomen:

Holly Aprile (11-7, with a 1.86 ERA) was named the A-10 pitcher of the month, for the umpteenth time, this past week. Aprile leads the conference in strikeouts and wins and has two no-hitters so far this season. She leads the conference in hitting with a .385 batting avg. with 14 RBIs and a .490 slugging percentage.

Co-captain Mary Duff (the only senior on this squad) is seventh in the league in batting (.325), leads the league in runs scored with 20 and is a perfect 8-for-8 in stolen base attempts. She has also been a leader off the field providing much needed maturity for a very young team.

Co-captain Jen Miller has rebounded from an early season fielding slump and has been almost perfect at second base since. There has been no slump with the bat as Miller is 12th in the league in batting (.303) and has

Women rally against fear

800 show support in nighttime event

By CHRISTINE MURPHY
Collegian Correspondent

About 800 women gathered at the University of Massachusetts Friday night for a "Take Back the Night" rally, an event in which women gathered to empower themselves and other women to abandon their fear of walking alone at night.

According to Adrenne Fleming, one of the rally's Five-College organizers, the goal of the demonstration was to create awareness of violence found in the everyday lives of women, and to reclaim the right of women to walk alone at night unharassed and unmolested.

The demonstration started with a rally on the steps of the UMass Student Union. As the sun began to set, programs and red arm bands were distributed to the gathering crowd. A table was set up displaying T-shirts and buttons with the theme of the protest printed on them: "Power in the Moonlight."

recounted an incident of sexual harassment that she had experienced "one night in a not so well lit park." Casumbal said from this sexual harassment women learn fear which prevents them from speaking out.

The next speaker was Kathleen O'Neil Alexander, the director of Victim/Witness of Hampshire County. "Sisters," she called, "be diligent, keep watch."

"The silence of men is still an ongoing problem. We will not go away. We will keep vigil. We seek safety, justice, and self-determination for our lives and our bodies. We will take nothing less. The unnatural darkness in our lives must end," said Alexander. When she finished her speech there was a standing ovation. The crowd chanted "take back the night."

Later during the rally, singer Kate Tolles performed a cover of "Fight Back" by Holly Near. The Valley Women's Martial Arts also gave a demonstration in self-defense tactics.

Loulou Hong, an Amherst College student, and a member of Helping Empower Rape Survivors (HERS), spoke on her experience as a rape survivor. She ended her story encouraging the crowd to "march, and reclaim your lives, that's what its all about."

After the sun set, a candlelight vigil was held to remember the women in the past year who have died because of male violence. Included in that list was Sharon Galligan, the UMass student who was found stabbed to death in her car last December.

A march to Amherst Common directly followed the vigil. The demonstrators chanted slogans, held banners and carried candles. The procession extended over three blocks, as women made their way through Amherst center claiming their right to walk the streets at night without fear.

The march paused for several minutes in front of the Amherst News Room, as women waved their fists chanting "stop selling porn, stop selling women."

The women gathered on Amherst Common for a closing ceremony.

There they were joined by a men's rally who offered their alliance. Begnt Johnson, an organizer of the men's rally and an Amherst College student, said: "We wanted to come and be a presence and not be obtrusive. We're here in support."

Steve Botkin, one of the leaders of the Men's Resource Connection, said: "We have a critical piece in this puzzle. We need to stand up and say it is not okay anymore. There has been men's silence for too long."

After the protest, an all women's dance was held at the Amherst College Annex.

Men support women's march against violence

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

Some 75 men attended a two hour informal discussion on violence and sexual harassment of women at Amherst College Friday night in support of the "Take Back the Night March," a women's march to protest violence against women.

Steven Botkin, head of the Men's Resource Connection, a men's group dedicated to end oppression against women, opened the discussion, saying: "For me, this is about building community, not just for tonight, but for the long run."

Many of the men told personal tales of friends, girlfriends and siblings who suffered through sexual assaults and rape. They told of the rage they felt when a woman close to them had been sexually and emotionally violated.

"My ex-wife had been raped twice before, and it even-

Tree planted in memory of professor

By MICHELLE ARACE
Collegian Correspondent

This year Arbor Day, a time set aside for tree planting, took on a special meaning at the University of Massachusetts, as some 45 students from the Stockbridge School of Agriculture attended a memorial tree planting for the late Bill Rosenau, a soil science instructor.

The planting took place between Friday morning and Saturday afternoon. Trees planted included native varieties of sugar maples, paper birch, and shadblow servicebeery trees. Several trees were donated by Dr. Dwayne Greene of Stewart's Nursery and Hadley Garden Center. The first sugar maple tree planting was videotaped and will be used as a teaching tool in landscape architecture classrooms.

In addition to the more than 30 trees planted near Morrill Science building and the Orchard Hill Residence Area, a 7,000 square foot bed was prepared for a wildflower garden.

The garden, located in front of the building, will be ready for planting in one month. Flowers for the garden are now growing in greenhouses; others will be planted

Sov. Jewish culture waning

Glasnost provides hope; But Yiddish/Hebrew books needed

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

Soviet Jews have begun to revive their culture through the recent progressive Soviet policies of glasnost, but lack the literature to educate their communities, a Jewish activist said last night.

Aaron Lansky, founder of the International Yiddish Book Center, spoke about his trip to the Soviet Union last December to some 20 people at the Jewish Community of Amherst.

The center, which runs a worldwide program for collecting and preserving Yiddish literature, has established 70 libraries in 20 countries. "The desire to learn and to keep Jewish culture alive was all over the U.S.S.R.," Lansky said. "The greatest crisis is that they have no books in Yiddish or Hebrew." Lansky said the center had been receiving requests for books from Soviet Jews, but had not been able to mail books to them. He said he travelled to the Soviet Union to figure out how he could personally deliver books to Jewish schools and organizations.

He said Soviet Jews had little knowledge of Judaism beyond their own experiences with anti-Semitism and a few had accepted Yiddish as a "surrogate Jewish culture." Many Jews knew little about both Judaism and Yiddish, he said.

"Many Soviet Jews recoiled from Yiddish because of its negative connotations," Lansky said.

He said Jewish culture has been best preserved in the Baltic republics where the Jewish population is greater. In Riga, Latvia, a Jewish school with over 400 students was established last September, he said.

Despite progress through glasnost, the Soviet Jews in the Baltics could suffer greatly due to the impending nationalistic movements, he said. Lansky said the Jewry should emigrate since anti-Semitic movements are very strong in Russia. He said it could take a minimum of 30 years to get the Jewish population out of the country.

"It is going to take a long time to get all of the Jews out of the Soviet Union," he said. "If things crack down on the nationalists, Jews will certainly be blamed. The nationalists hate Jews, because they think the Jews brought Bolshevikism."

The slogan of the Moldavian national movement is "We want to drown the Russians in the blood of the Jews," Lansky said.

He said it is important to educate Jews while they are still in the Soviet Union, but the survival of Jewish culture depends upon the success of glasnost and other progressive programs.

Lansky said he plans to return to the Soviet Union in July to distribute 8,000 books to Soviet Jewish leaders and educators who he met last December. There is still a great need for teachers and translators to revive Jewish culture, he said.

"This is a community which has been cut off for 72 years with Jews that want to learn," he said. "We can change history by allowing a community that has been cut off for so long to revive their culture for their children."

Spring sparks students to skip school

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

It's warm for the first day since fall, the sun is blinding, flowers dot the hills, people are skipping classes, your friends with allergies are sneezing: Spring 1990 has finally arrived.

After an Amherst winter of perpetual snow, ice and mud plus near Nordic winds, the University of Massachusetts moves outside.

Discussion sections, DC meals and intimate encounters can now be seen all over campus under green shady trees.

And as fast as spring evolves in New England, grass beaches pop up in every residential area and Greek lawn.

Jay H. Gelb, a freshman in the School of Management, laid out in the near 90 degree weather on Friday on the Van Meter Hill before rushing off to play in the junior varsity lacrosse game.

"A few fans showed up and they laid out in the sun," he said. "And after the game the team jumped over to a house and had a barbecue. It's one of best things about the spring."

Gelb, who summed up spring with one word 'warm,' said he went to all his classes Friday although a great deal of his colleagues did not.

"I figure I should go to all of them when most people are not," he said. "You get a lot more attention this time of the year because of it. Makes an impression."

Other students did not see as much of the sun Friday and Saturday as they would have liked.

"Like an idiot, I stayed inside Friday and worked on my resume and a research paper," said senior English major Athena Rose. "But I figure if I compromise this beautiful day, I can rationalize not going to work some other day if I get a job from the resume."

Rose, who also spent Saturday working on her research paper, said Friday felt like "school was out for the summer the way the Student Union was empty."

Rose said after she passes her paper in Wednesday she is, "on my way to becoming very tan again."

Other students like Daniel D. McCall, a junior psychology major, were also not so lucky. He spent most of Friday in a psychology lab.

"It's not the best way to spend the day," he said. "But Saturday I went to the Central [Residential Area] Spring Fling and that was pretty good because the weather was nice and the bands were good."

McCall said while spring does not draw him away from studying too much, he did admit to not going to class on Friday.

"But I often sleep through that one — it's early in the morning," he said.

But one student said the weather was affecting her.

Felicia A. Gedacht, a sophomore sports management major, said with a laugh that she has not studied in two weeks. She said warm spring weather is a problem for her.

"I just won't study during the day when it's warm ," she said. "I don't start studying until two in the morning, after all my TV shows are off."

"But studying his time of the day is great because it's cool and no one is up who can disturb me and I can get stuff done."

Activists speak on China's rule over Tibet

By LORI MENARD
Collegian Correspondent

Two Tibetan human rights activists spoke Friday night at Memorial Hall, calling for an end to China's 40 year rule over Tibet.

Lhasang Tsering and Jamyang Norbu, active in the struggle of Tibetans in exile to regain complete independence, have both fought in Tibetan resistance forces against the Chinese.

Tsering is the president of the Tibetan Youth Congress. Norbu, a founding member of the Tibetan Youth Congress, is the former director of the Tibetan Institute of Performing Arts.

Tibet was invaded by the Chinese in 1950 and has suffered a history of brutal oppression ever since, the speakers said. Uprisings among the Tibetan people have sporadically continued in the following years, but were constantly suppressed by the superior

Film class harassed by unidentified men

'Straight pride' rally allegedly involved; prof. entangled in scuffle

By CHRIS MACEK
Collegian Staff

Hours after a "straight pride" rally at the University of Massachusetts last Tuesday, a group of 10 to 15 men disrupted professor Arthur Keene's anthropology class "Culture Through Film" where he was showing The Life and Times of Harvey Milk, a documentary about the assassination of the first openly gay elected politician.

A student security patrol, seeing several men run from Thompson hall, where the class was held, radioed UMass police, who later picked up two carloads of male subjects.

The identities of the men involved are confidential, police said, since no one was arrested. However, they are believed to be UMass students because Keene filed formal charges Friday through the Dean of Students office.

"I grew suspicious just before the men took the stage," Keene said. "Both back doors of the auditorium opened and several men came in and took positions in aisle seats."

As Keene left the projection booth to see what was going on, he said the front door opened, and approximately eight men came in and stood on the stage, facing the audience with hands on their hips.

First-year UMass student Adam Keats, who witnessed the incident, said his reaction was one of surprise and fear.

"It was dark and at first I was just bewildered by all the commotion, then also really scared," he said. "I couldn't see the men's faces and one started to take his pants down."

"The film is very powerful and to have it suddenly become real was terrifying," Keats said.

The professor said when he reached the stage, he approached the man nearest him to demand identification. Just then someone yelled, "Run boys! Run!" and most of the men fled out the several exits while a few found seats and hid themselves in the 250 plus person auditorium.

Keene scuffled with one of intruders and then followed him out of the auditorium, Keats said.

"I thought they were straight pride people," said one female student, "and I wondered if [Keene] was getting beaten up. People were running all around, but I was too afraid to leave my seat because there seemed to be large men at all exits."

Keene called the class disruption "an act of terrorism."

"The class was outraged and I feel it is very important that the administration send a strong message that it will not tolerate this kind of action," he said. "We can't talk about civility and academic freedom, then sit by while this kind of thing goes on."

"This is clearly unacceptable behavior," said Jo-Anne Vanin, Dean of Students. "I am personally outraged by such an intrusion into the classroom."

Faculty Senate Secretary Frank Hugus also condemned the incident. "Something like this that happens to one professor affects us all," he said. "I see it on three levels. First, it's no coincidence that this happened on the same day as the "straight pride" rally in a class watching a film about Harvey Milk, and is nothing other than a homophobic overreaction."

"Second, it brings up the overall question of civility, and the levels of intimidation and violence directed toward women, people of color and others on this campus,"

Ten student employees honored at award ceremony

By MORGAN BITTON
Collegian Correspondent

Ten out of the approximately 5500 student employees at the University of Massachusetts were honored with cash awards at the 1990 Student Employee of the Year luncheon last Friday.

Senior psychology major Beth Sausiville was awarded the highest honor, "Outstanding Student Employee of the Year," for which she received a University mirror and $600. Sauseville is a lifeguard training instructor, currently teaching two sections.

Last summer, the Red Cross implemented new programs for lifeguard instructors. In order to teach classes, instructors were required to update their experience by taking the new classes in standard first aid, CPR and lifeguard training. Sausville was the only UMass student to take all three classes over the summer, certifying her to instruct in the fall.

Sausville, surprised by the award, said: "It's nice to be appreciated for work you do."

Nine other student employees each received $300 awards. The honors were announced by Merle Ryan of the Student Employee Office and presented by Vice Chancellor/University Relations and Development Deidre Ling and Assistant Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs William Weitzer.

The winners were chosen based on criteria such as regular attendance, dependability, successful completion of tasks, initiative and original contributions.

Supervisors and employees submitted nominations and essays, describing the students accomplishments in the workplace. The following nine finalists were chosen out of a field of 94 nominations:

- Junior general business and finance major Sothea Yem is a clerical assistant in the Staff Training and Development Office. Despite the fact that English is not her first language, Yem has developed telephone and communication skills which are necessary in her position.
- Senior psychology major Patricia Morland is employed by the University Library in the microforms area. She often works with students unfamiliar with microform equipment.
- For the past four years, senior general business and finance major Cynthia Ostrowski, has worked as an office assistant in the physics and astronomy departments. According to her nomination papers, she solves immediate problems but also anticipates needs and follow-up procedures for projects.
- Tammy Nicora, a senior general business and finance major, has developed procedures to track down people who pass off bounced checks at the University Store, where she serves as information clerk.
- Senior communication major Tara Igoe is employed by the Chancellor's Office and often volunteers to assist with special faculty events.
- Beth Dagget, a junior sociology major, has worked in the Development Office for the past two and a half years as a clerical assistant.
- Junior anthropology major Mary Crabb works as a Departmental Assistant.
- James A. Cohen, a senior English major, is employed by the journalism department. He has initiated projects to help the department's organization, according to his nomination papers.
- Junior communication disorders major Colleen Adams is a student supervisor in Hampden Snackbar.

Lynn Santer of Financial Aid services congratulated the honored student employees for "a job well done."

We are appalled by the comparisons drawn between the State of Israel and the Republic of South Africa. Israel is a democratic state that prides itself on guaranteeing the civil rights of all its citizens. The official policy of the Israeli government condemns Apartheid and all other forms of racism. Furthermore :

- Contrary to the United States, the Israeli parliament passed laws indicating that racism is not protected by freedom of expression. The Israeli Supreme Court banned a racist party from participating in the last elections and it's leader now faces charges for racial instigation.
- Israel is the only true democracy in the Middle East. Israel is the only country in that area where every person, regardless of nationality, creed, sex or color has equal access to the Supreme Court. The Israeli parliament includes freely elected representatives of diverse religions, Jews, Moslems, Christians, and Druze.
- Israel has a tradition of absorbing refugees from around the world. Israel was the first to take in the Boat People from Vietnam. Israel is the only country around the globe whose doors are always open for persecuted Jews. Currently, Israel serves as sanctuary for Jews leaving the Soviet Union and Ethiopia.
- Israel also has a tradition of extending agricultural aid in the form of on site training and training programs in Israel for Third World Countries, including those having no diplomatic ties with Israel.
- Israel has an ambitious, well developed research program focusing on issues crucial to the environment which it shares freely with countries around the world :
  - utilization of solar energy
  - desert reclamation
  - reforestation
  - agriculture, especially high yield crops and crop storage without the use of chemical pesticides
- Israel has shown in the past its willingness to sacrifice territory and natural resources for peace. Israel gave up nearly 70% of the territory it held following the 1967 Six Day War, including the only oil fields available to it in exchange for peace with Egypt in 1979.
- Israel is deeply devoted to education. It maintains a system of public universities of world wide recognition catering to students and researchers from around the world.

This University is committed to Human Rights, Education, and Diversity. We call upon you to support a country that is based on these same values.

Chinese forces, they said.

While some consider Tibet a legitimate part of China, Tsering said this view takes its basis in the fact that in the 13th Century, when the Mongolians had exercised control over China they has also exercised control over Tibet.

Calling this claim "illegitimate," he said it is "like the United States taking over India because they were both ruled by Britain."

Tsering said the most serious threat to Tibet now are large numbers of Chinese settlers immigrating to Tibet, outnumbering the native people. The official language of Tibet is Chinese, not the language of the native people, he said.

Tibetan society has been traditionally religious; their main religion is Lamaism, a form of Buddhism. In 1950, after the Chinese defeated Tibetans, they signed a 17-point treaty which stated that Tibet would give up some of its sovereignty, but would retain religious freedom.

However, as tensions between the Tibetans and the Chinese escalated into military clashes, the Chinese destroyed nearly all of Tibet's religious monasteries and temples, Tsering said.

Norbu said the Chinese government continues to suppress the Tibetan religion today.

"The Chinese have now banned the Tibetans from offering Thapa to the Gods," he said, referring to a worship ritual. Tsering said the Tibetan culture is gradually deterioring.

When the Dalai Lama, the supreme religious leader in Tibet, fled in 1959, he escaped to India and set up a democratic Tibetan government in exile in Dharamsals. The purpose of this government and the Tibetan Youth Congress is to preserve the Tibetan cultural heritage and language, Tsering said.

However, he said "two cultures are rising up," one inside Tibet and the one outside of Tibet. "[We must] preserve ancient cultures from being destroyed," Tsering said. "We have lost many cultures already."

In his travels around the country, Norbu said he finds "tremendous misinformation of Chinese students."

"Of course this is a generalization," he said, adding that there is a "racist element" among many other Chinese from Hong Kong or Taiwan who "seem to think of Tibetans as barbarians."

The speakers also felt that there was a lack of coverage and attention given to the problems in Tibet.

Tsering said the new struggling democratic movements in Europe will have a great effect on the Tibetans. He said they have given confidence to Chinese democratic movements.

"The mystery has been broken of communist supremacy," Tsering said. "If Lithuania can stand up to the Soviet Union, then Tibet can stand up to China."

"I have tremendous hope in the people, especially young people," he said, vowing not to stop fighting for Tibetan independence through the Tibetan Youth Congress until it becomes a reality.

"The Tibetan Youth Congress will be dissolved when Tibet is freed," he said.

Hugus said.

"And third, it is the chilling effect it will have on academic freedom, the spirit of openness and tolerance, and intellectual inquiry, which are essential to an institute of higher education," he said.

John Cole, president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors union said similar incidents have happened at other universities.

"At Dartmouth for example, the level of intimidation towards students of color, women and homosexuals was so high, it forced classes to meet off campus," he said. "The union has not officially acted yet," Cole said. "But we're very concerned about the protection of the classrooms, and we urge the administration to act expediently to bring this issue to a close before the end of the semester."

Hugus said President Duffey met with the Faculty Senate Rules Committee on Thursday and discussed the incident. As of yet, there is no statement from the President's office regarding this issue.

Some discussion sections of the class later in the week were entirely absorbed by the incident, letting students talk about their experiences and feelings. Many said they were really shook up by the incident.

"I didn't know what was going on," said one female student, "but when I saw those men just walk onto the stage, I remembered the incident in Montreal where 14 women were shot, and I kept looking, afraid to see a gun."

"I don't see this as a prank", Keene said. "I don't see it as innocent, I see it as an act that challenges the basic rights of what students can and cannot learn."

tually destroyed our relationship," said one man.

A University of Massachusetts student skilled in the martial arts said he "almost killed a guy" for raping a friend of his.

Discussion then focused on the guilt that many men felt about being male.

"I have a fear of walking down the street and finding a woman attractive," said one Amherst College student. "Is that objectification?"

Other men talked about what to do when their female friends were the victims of verbal sexual harassment. One man said he once said to a friend, "Hey, that woman has a nice ass," and he said his friend replied, "You know, you shouldn't objectify women like that." The man said that conversation changed his feelings about treating women as people, not objects.

Brian Fitzgerald, who works with disturbed adolescents in Northampton, said: "The best way to fight this [oppression] is to teach the little boys growing up not to do it. It's important that we do not accept it, even among our friends, and that we be good role models for our kids."

Men signed a sheet that was passed around for anyone interested in joining future support groups dealing with masculinity and discussing the oppression of women.

The event was sponsored by Men Against Rape Combatting Harrassment (MARCH) of Amherst College.

by seed.

Those responsible for the designing and planting include: Jack Ahearn, assistant professor of landscape architecture and regional planning; Allan Snow, senior arbor park major and planning committee chairman; advisor Nancy Garrabrants; and several other committee members.

Permission to plant in designated areas was obtained through Bill Lambert from University Landscape Architecture. Safety precautions were taken through Digsafe, a group that insures no disruption of gasoline, pipes, and underground wires.

Shovels, rakes and a rototiller for the planting was loaned by Physical Plant.

The planting was completed with a short ceremony attended by some 40 people, including Rosenau's family, alumni and friends. Brian Welch, a senior landscape operations major, delivered the main address.

Plantings by Stockbridge students are common and graduating classes usually leave trees for posterity.

The class of 1990 gift came in the form of a memorial planting for Bill Rosenau, not only due to recent death but because he was a good humored instructor, and well-respected by his students, a ceremony participant said.

The planting service was "to complete out incompletions with Bill and for ourselves and alumni," the participant said.

Media does not reveal inhumane conditions in Israel

In America, the media concerning the Palestinian refugee problem and the crisis in Israel has been consistently pro-Israel, reflecting the relationship that Israel has maintained as an American ally since its birth as a national Jewish state in 1948.

Micah Nassar

I would like to share with you some of the scenes I experienced as I recently toured the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Inside these boundaries are countless numbers of refugees living in camps where grotesque and inhumane conditions flourish and where their reality is a horrible, detestable ferocity to me.

In Bethlehem, one can find the Church of Nativity, a magnificently ancient church built in 326 A.D., where Jesus Christ was supposedly born and where his manger remains.

However, Bethlehem holds more than pious wonders. It holds a realm of human suffering – the Deisheh refugee camp, where five to seven thousand Palestinians live in poverty, fear, harassment, discrimination and hopelessness.

For the youth, it is a life with no future, no hope, just grief, danger and despair. For the parents, it is a life of never-ending hard work, worry for their children and madness.

We were invited into one refugee home, a family of eight children with no father, living in a cement house about the size of one z-room in Southwest.

One year ago, their young father, while standing by a window in the house, was struck in the head by a stray, high-velocity bullet shot by an Israeli soldier. To this day, there remain stains on that ceiling that signify and symbolize the virtue of the Palestinian struggle, clear as daylight, honest to God.

The mother, holding her tears inside, spoke her tragic tale. Her five-year-old daughter sang a political song of the Intifada (the Palestinian uprising) in Arabic, yet you could see the meaning in her eyes, hear it in her voice. For singing this song three months before, she was brutally slapped around by a soldier.

The eldest son had been stopped one cold night while walking. He was harassed for being out late, pushed around, then beaten and stripped down to his underwear and then let go to run home.

The poverty, the unsanitary and polluted conditions are shared by 750,000 Palestinians in a 25-mile strip of land. By the time we arrived in Gaza City, where one of the largest refugee camps called the Beach Camp is found alongside the Mediterranean, I knew Israel was a state of temporary abhorrence.

What exists there is monstrously inhumane and gross to the people, and unbelievably, consciously ignorant to the sake of the land itself.

All along the streets in the camps there are rivers that carry open sewage and waste, all of which flows into the Mediterranean. No trash has been taken away for years, which is humiliating to the Arabs since they pay over 75 percent of their income to the Israeli government, to which they get autonomy in return (Camp David Agreement).

Israel retains the right to interfere with them in any way – such as taking away land, changing boundaries, moving houses and destroying olive and citrus trees which support Arab families.

By terms of Israeli law, no Palestinian has the right to legal consultation with a lawyer. Everyday a new victim is arrested without an explanation, and most of the time they spend months to years in prison before being told of their crime, sometimes it being only a warning.

Israel could be defined as a paradoxical slave society because all menial work such as construction, road repair and farming are done by the Arabs at low pay. Only the physically fit under Israeli standards are picked to work and others are left broke, jobless and shattered.

The essence of a military occupation is humiliation in any and every aspect of the people's lives under oppression. It is a land without a people — a people without a land.

Now after assessing these facts, one can draw that thin line between terrorism and a people's struggle against inhumane and morally-squandered conditions that exist intentionally.

Seniors in yearbook pay twice

O.K. Here's a quickie quiz for all you graduating seniors:

1. Did you all pay your $5 to have your picture taken for the 1990 Index yearbook?

2. Did you all know that if you don't pay $5 to have your picture taken, not only does your picture not appear in the 1990 Index, neither does your name as a graduating senior?

In other words, pay $5 or your name does not get listed!

My understanding of a senior yearbook by definition at least lists the names of all graduating seniors, whether their pictures appear or not.

I asked the Index people why those who do not want their pictures to appear must also sacrifice any mention of themselves, and I was told that those people do not help pay for the yearbook.

They told me that the yearbook is self-supporting, not student-funded and they would not pay the "maybe $3,000" it might cost to list all unpictured seniors' names.

I learned that this "rule" of not printing all names is in the Index Constitution, which is approved by the SGA since the Index is an RSO.

The SGA is funded by the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF), which every undergraduate student helps pay for when we pay our Student Activities fee.

In addition, Index manages its money, like all RSOs, through the Student Activities Office, which again is paid for by students through the SATF.

Now, it seems to me that, though it may receive most of its money through yearbook sales, students do indeed support the Index monetarily through the services provided by the SATF.

I believe that one of a yearbook's purposes is to provide a memento to our glorious college years, including a listing of all members of the class with which we graduated.

Considering the fact that all students do, in some fashion, fund it, Index is doing graduating seniors a disservice by including only the names of those paying the $5 sitting fee.

I myself am beginning to regret already paying for a yearbook.

Apathy stifles Blacks, Jews

Our campus is known for taking an apathetic position towards important issues.

Meshenberg/Smolka

Why work so hard if no one is willing to take time out to educate themselves? Apathy is the answer.

One example of this can be seen in the lack of response to the combined problem facing the Black and Jewish communities.

For many years, both communities have undergone oppression and fought against it together. History shows we have had a strong bond between us, but the relationship has begun to break down.

Tensions have been building between our two communities internationally, in U.S. cities and even in our "utopian" UMass. In response to this, the Black/Jewish Coalition was formed.

The Black/Jewish Coalition is a group of students working to strengthen and re-establish ties between the Black and Jewish communities through education, discussion and association. It has been in existence for over a year and very few people are taking advantage of it. Apathy is prevailing.

Because of this apathy, people do not even know about the tension that has been building between the Black and Jewish communities. There have been numerous obstacles in its struggle to save the dwindling relationship.

The problem the Black/Jewish Coalition has been confronted with has been that of apathy. The few people who have joined this group have gained a deeper understanding of each other's cultures, heritages, religions and histories. Those are the people who have stayed for an extended period of time.

Some have come out of curiosity and others come with the intension of personal gain. These people rarely return.

This does not help the struggle as a whole. Serious commitment is necessary if we wish to reach a common ground.

This may seem impossible while many people are holding to the theory of "divide and conquer." If we want to overcome the people who are putting this theory into practice, we must bind together.

We must stop letting other people do all the work, while others quietly reap the benefits. When Farrakhan came to visit this campus, it was quite clear that many people were upset with the broken alliances between the two groups.

Workshops were formed, classes took time out of their regular schedules to talk about the troublesome atmosphere and arguments were heard left and right.

Then all of a sudden, nothing. It's as though Farrakhan took the life out of UMass when he left.

Granted, we do not want mass hysteria; however, we do not want people keeping their feelings inside. This was once an important issue. What happened?

The Black/Jewish Coalition has not forgotten about the importance of this issue. They encourage all religions, all cultures and all heritages to join their group.

Just because nobody talks about the tension does not mean it ceases to exist.

One cannot just wish a problem away. One has to be willing to work at it.

"I CANNOT TELL A LIE—I AM YOUR ENVIRONMENTAL PRESIDENT!"

Armenian genocide exaggerated

U.S.A., January 27, 1973: A 78-year-old Armenian immigrant, Gourgen Yanikian, assassinated Mehmet Baydar (the Turkish Consul-General in Los Angeles). This assassination was the first link in the ongoing chain of Armenian terrorism.

Melisa Canli

France, February 28, 1983: A bomb exploded at a Turkish-owned travel agency in Paris. A French secretary was killed in the explosion and four Frenchmen were wounded. A few minutes later A.S.A.L.A. (Armenian Secret Army for the Liberation of Armenia) claimed responsibility.

How come we never hear about events like these? How come Armenians are always portrayed as a victimized people who seem to have suffered an injustice comparable to the Jewish Holocaust? This is the second year I have witnessed a Campus Center concourse table and an appalling photo in the Collegian about the genocide of the Armenians by the Turks.

As a half-Turkish citizen who spent almost all her life in Istanbul, I feel it is my responsibility to give UMass an opportunity to hear the other side of the issue, a side that does not paint Turks as barbaric, violent peoples who go around murdering citizens of different ethnicities.

As American journalist Colman McCarthy's words summarized:

"The Turks and the Armenians are blood enemies, we think — if we think about the issue at all. In choosing sides, we go against the Turks. Images of murderous sultans wielding thickened sabers remain. The stereotype of the savage Turk persists. . ."

The talk of "genocide" that the Armenian terrorists throw around after they kill another Turkish diplomat was echoed in Congress last April (1983) in observance of Armenian Martyrs Day. Nearly 40 members of the House made statements about the era of "modern genocide" that the Turks supposedly brought on in the alleged killing of 1.5 million Armenians. . . This onrush of congressional concern for Armenian went too far.

Among independent historians and scholars, the events of 70 years ago are not as black and white as the congressional friends of Armenians made them out to be. . .

After the war Armenian sources said that approximately 600,000 Armenians had died, and this figure is much closer to the truth. Turks were indeed killing Armenians in 1915. But Armenians were also killing Turks, and indeed in the war, many more Turks died than Armenians. Most who died on both sides died more of starvation and disease than from bullets.

The current Turkish government is trapped in a double bind. Its diplomats live in fear of gunmen and its officials are frustrated in exploring a period of history that few in the West care to study.

A false impression has been created that Turkey is stonewalling the facts of the pasty by not admitting that genocide occurred. In fact, it didn't. Even if historians agreed about genocide, today's Turkish government has no political or philosophical ties to the old Ottoman Empire."

There is no denying that Armenians were killed in 1915, but their numbers and their cause for being killed, namely for a genocide, are greatly exaggerated.

Armenians who were collaborating with the Turks' enemies, the Russians, were evacuated from their homes and some were killed. Many Turks died, too.

But in 1990, it is time for Armenian terrorist organizations to stop using these wartime deaths, mainly caused by famine and plague, as a rallying cry to murder Turkish diplomats worldwide.

And it is time somebody spoke up to show the other side of the historical coin that the UMass Armenian Club is ignoring.

ARTS & LIVING

Shear talent spawns 'Unplugged,' production successes

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

Talking with Jules Shear is a pleasing experience. Before his show at the Bluewall Friday night, he divulged his humor, talent and unobtrusive sense of his own accomplishments and roots.

About nine months ago, Shear decided it was time for acoustically talented musicians to perform on a show geared toward that talent.

He thought it would be interesting for the public to hear the "unplugged" musicians in their element, and proposed the concept to several private networks, many of whom shot the idea down because Shear wasn't "a big enough star." They claimed it wasn't their style and that it didn't fit into their format.

"Robert Small, a guy who had helped produce some of my albums brought the idea to MTV," Shear said. "The people there went for it and put together the concept. Lots of changes, but it was out there."

And so the genesis of MTV Unplugged was forged.

MTV said they would definitely give it try after the pilot with Squeeze members Glenn Tilbrook and Chris Difford, singer/songwriter Syd Straw and Cars' guitarist Elliot Easton.

"They said, 'Hey maybe this guy can do it.'"

Guests would perform in front of a live audience of about 150 people, and Shear would be the host. With a resolved, but twisted sarcasm, Shear said his input into what acts are brought onto Unplugged are rather stymied by all the bureaucracy and departmentalization at the station.

"Basically, there has been someone hired to bring in the acts. I'll be asked what I think, I'll tell them and they'll say 'Oh, okay Jules,' and bring on whoever they please. But it's not that bad. All the people that have been on have been really great."

He said he was kind of surprised when he found out Glen Frey would be a guest, and found out from his mailman that Peter Buck (of R.E.M.) had been denied access to the show because he was not "famous enough."

"I personally don't care about the fame of the guest, I care about the music. But I'm not paying the bills, and it's not my call. But I was pretty surprised my mailman knew."

Shear began playing the guitar at 13 years old, and moved from Pittsburgh to Los Angeles where he discovered the Troubador: mecca for the genre of artists like Tom Waits, Jackson Browne, and the Eagles.

"It was considered very uncool to be on your own, bands were the way to go. So I surrendered to that fact and joined a band. You use them for what they are," Shear said. "I sat down with an acoustic [guitar] years later and that was the most refreshing thing."

Shear said he prefers being solo, but has been producing for some bands recently.

"I really don't want to get into producing. Basically all I have to do is sit there and say: 'Start. Stop."

When Shear was first starting out, he said he had a producer who didn't know the first thing about his own job, and it disgusted him.

"I'd get so fed up, I'd walk out and go catch a double feature. He didn't know where I was going. He thought I was crazy, but he really didn't know what was happening.

"I had spent my whole life doing this and was trusting him to take my life and have it come out good, and I didn't have that trust in him," Shear said. "I would never produce someone who didn't have that trust."

"Having been a producer, you know what goes into it, you have that empathy. And I'm not above learning. I know something about making records, but I'm sure I can still learn."

Marty Willson-Piper (of the Church) and Shear have joined forces many times, once recently in the production of the Jolly Boys, a reggae band out of Jamaica.

"They would break a guitar string, tying it where it snapped, and keep playing. So I brought a ton of extra strings with me when I went down there. Marty would say: 'Okay, guys, time to change the string,' and they would just stare. These guitar strings were like manna from heaven for them, it was great."

Maybe those who haven't yet discovered Jules Shear could still learn a thing or two and realize his talents might be on the plane of manna from heaven.

Corny 'Crybaby:' a rockin' good time

By SUSAN BROOKS
and REBECCA McNEILL Collegian Correspondents

The new John Waters film, Cry Baby, reminds us that the "bad boy" known for shock-value features such as Pink Flamingos and Polyester has joined, or at least come too near, the mainstream. After all, the 1960s ode, Hairspray, his first commercially successful (and relatively tame) film came out just two years ago. But both newcomers and experienced Waters fans alike should enjoy this excessively corny parody.

You could call it Harispray in the 50s; Johnny Depp (yes, the teenybopper hearthtrob star of 21 Jump Street, the choice of whom is as tastefully corny as the casting of Sonny Bono and Debbie Harry, in Hairspray, as a couple) stars as Crybaby, the striking greaser, leader of the Drapes, who constantly fight it out with the Squares (God love 'em). The Drapes wear leather and ride cycles, while the Squares live it up at the RSVP Charm School.

Rikki Lake returns to Waters Land (after starring in Hairspray) as Crybaby's eternally pregnant sister and Drape, Pepper. The Drapes are opposed to the Squares, and kept apart from them by cops and the snotty Chairwoman of RSVP. But Pepper (a Drape) proves her sibling devotion by helping transform a Square, whom Crybaby had his eye on, into a cool, bad Drape.

Waters always gets a great cast together, and again in this film there are familiar faces from his past work as well as the expected surprise or two.

Ex-hardcore musician Mink Stole and actor Troy Donahue, who were hilarious in Polyester, play crazed Holy-Rollers who are the vigilantly disapproving parents of a Drape. Another mother (this time of the sultry Drape, played to perfection by sultry Traci Lords) was portrayed by Patty Hearst (yes, Patty Hearst, who apparently Waters had met at Cannes). Iggy Pop, as Crybaby's slimy Uncle Belvedere is entertainingly insane.

We both had a really good time at this flick. The parody of "Jailhouse Rock," in which Depp sings, "I must be doing time for being young" is especially not to be missed.

Jules Shear

Wealth of talent in Jules

By GRACE SULLIVAN
Collegian Correspondent

Singer/songwriter Jules Shear displayed his wealth of talent to a nowhere near capacity audience in the Bluewall on Friday night. Apparently, ticket sales came to a screeching halt once the Feelies were dropped from the bill; the UPC staff came very close to outnumbering the members of the audience. The brave souls who were willing to risk their Friday evening were well-rewarded.

Shear proved to be a thoroughly engaging storyteller as he shared the origins of each song with the audience. The audience couldn't help but laugh as he explained how an evening of bowling led to the Bangles recording his "If She Knew What She Wants." Shear also penned another top 10 hit -- Cyndi Lauper's "All Through the Night." Perhaps Shear's most amusing anecdote was about his and Elliot Easton's hunt for an obscure Roy Orbison song. The quest inspired Shear to write what he calls, and to which I must agree, "The Perfect Roy Orbison Song." Unfortunately Orbison turned it down at the time, due to his lack of interest in "perfect" Roy Orbison songs, and now it's too late for him to change his mind.

As wonderful as Shear's stories were, they could not surpass his ability to perform his songs. His guitar playing was simple and understated, providing a perfect background for his lyrics, which he delivered in a Bob Dylanesque style. It seemed as if his songs brought a personal experience to mind for every member of the audience. At the end of his set, the audience, would not let him leave without an encore. They were rewarded with a acoustic rendition of the Rolling Stones' "Mixed Emotions." Jules Shear has already gained recognition as a songwriter, and on Friday he proved himself to be a gifted performer as well.

Local bands Minibus Sandwitch and Free Press opened the show, and their rocking rhythms had all 15 of their fans dancing away. Free Press did not allow the lack of an audience to stand in the way of performing a highly original set. Minibus Sandwitch, although less original in their sound, were also entertaining. During their set, it appeared as if Ian Curtis' spirit possessed lead singer Jerry LeBlanc, causing him to gyrate in an interesting fashion. Unfortunately, Mr. LeBlanc felt the need to chat rather loudly during Jules Shear's performance. He succeeded in annoying those around him who were trying to enjoy the very gifted musician. Perhaps in future Mr. LeBlanc should go home directly after leaving the stage.

Gospel show rouses audience to feet

By NICK OSTIS
Collegian Correspondent

The 19th Annual Black Musicians' Conference culminated with a spirited gospel concert Saturday night at the Fine Arts Center. Before a less than half-capacity crowd, the Richard Smallwood Singers and the Mighty Clouds of Joy brought the faithful to their feet with an inspiring program of traditional and contemporary sounds of the genre.

Although the ensemble bears Mr. Smallwood's name, he generously and wisely shared the spotlight with a vocal quintet, four women and a man, all impeccably dressed. The singers, accompanied by a well-rehearsed, funky trio plus Smallwood on piano, thrilled the audience with their rousing solos and magnetic harmonies.

Smallwood possesses a terrific voice and is a consummate showman. A lively, foot-stomping, call and response finale elicited two disparate responses — whetted the majority's appetite for the Mighty Clouds of Joy or drove some dashing for the exits wondering what they had innocently stumbled into. Gospel music is not for the faint of heart.

In their first ever trip to Amherst, the Los Angeles-originated, widely-heralded Might Clouds of Joy complete the weeklong conference with a show that encompassed a more secular, but no less passionate sound. With 26 albums and thousands of performances all over the globe to their credit, the Grammy-winning Clouds liberated the crowd with a set that grew in intensity until virtually everyone was on their feet. The versatile bands, comprised of guitar, bass, drums and keyboards pumped like an R and B freight train navigating into country ("Will the Circle be Unbroken"), disco ("Ride the Mighty High," their '70s number one hit) and pop ("Wind Beneath My Wings" from Bette Midler's movie Beaches).

Featuring spokesman Joe Ligon's stratospheric falsetto (How can a man sing so high?), the Clouds, both individually and ensemble, are a vital vocal force. Despite Ligon's pronouncement, "We're all god-fearing men," this is a party band if I ever saw one. It's a shame there weren't more people there to enjoy it.

The Bulgarian State Female Choir brings new meaning to folk music

By CYNTHIA CONRAD
Collegian Correspondent

The Bulgarian State Female Choir enchanted the audience at John M. Greene Hall during a benefit for the Center for the Arts in Northampton last Saturday night, with some of the most amazingly beautiful and unusual music of Eastern European tradition.

The 24-member choir attracted several hundred rowdy, appreciative fans, including singer/songwriter Jules Shear of MTV Unplugged, many Valley musicians, artists, students and NoHo culture-mongers.

Joining the group was a quartet of Bulgarian musicians, playing foot-stomping regional folk tunes on traditional wind instruments such as the gaida, tambura, kaval and gadulka. From the onset of the two hour concert, the choir's intimacy with the audience bridged language barriers; the sheer enthusiasm and playfulness of the choir and quartet lended the studio-perfect vocals a lively personality to which only a live performance can do justice. Whether singing solo or in groups ranging in size from two to six members, these women were stunning; the voices floated, quivered, scurried, swooped, and yelped effortlessly, eliciting murmurs of surprise and amusement from those unfamiliar with Bulgarian music. It was particularly apparent in the smaller groups that each individual voice could sound like two or three voices together, giving the music ethereal quality. The highlights of the evening were the hauntingly beautiful "Sani Mi, Maytcho" ("Get Up, Mother") and the encore finale — a very America adieu — "Oh Susanna."

The mystery of the Bulgarian voices is attributed to the tradition of diaphonic singing, in which two voices track each other in seconds, sevenths and ninths. Yet, while a Western chorus would find the dissonant intervals and lack of vibrato difficult, they are natural components of the Bulgarian musical tradition. This tradition has been handed down from generation to generation, from harvesting songs to rowdy entertainment, the music itself permeates Bulgarian culture. The archetypal stage design, donated by Richard Rescia and Project Opera, visually conveyed a sense of the music's timeless grace. The Bulgarian State Female Vocal Choir was indeed a rare, exciting experience as well as a great opportunity to support Northampton community arts programming.

"Through the Robot's Eye"

Most robots today are blind, which severely limits their useful application to intelligent activity. Some, however, are being made to "see" in elementary ways, and are now able to identify known objects and perceived surfaces by processing sensory data. To do this, robots require many methods for extracting visual cues, for representing information, and for using stored knowledge and prior experience. By the turn of the century, advances in computer vision will have extended the capabilities of many different kinds of machines.

Visions from Vega; junk from Cowboys

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

days of open Hand
Suzanne Vega
A and M
1/2

The Caution Horses
Cowboy Junkies
RCA

The first song on Suzanne Vaga's much anticipated new album, days of open Hand, is called "Tired of Sleeping." It's appropriate. After single-handedly fostering the resurgence of the women's folk movement, Vega has been content to stand back and watch the likes of Tracy Chapman, Michelle Shocked and Shawn Colvin (who appears on Vega's album) take the spotlight. But now the freshly rested Vega has returned, and her product is as dreamy, mystical and beautiful as ever.

Many of the songs on the album focus on the future, including "Tired of Sleeping," possibly the closest thing to a hit single on the album. The song (featuring John Linnell of They Might Be Giants on accordion) is simply about wanting to wake from bad dreams. Vega sings, "Oh Mom/I wonder when I'll be waking/It's just that there's so much to do/And I'm tired of sleeping."

"Predictions" and "Book of Dreams," also have the future as their theme. Yet both are open and surreal. They offer no answers, just heartfelt hopes and wishes.

"Men in a War," which sounds a bit too much like Vega's "Straight Lines," from her self-titled debut album, deals, sometimes graphically, with amputation. But also subtly serves as a political statement about women in the armed forces.

Other issues that you rarely see on pop albums, such as attempted suicide ("Fifty-Fifty Chance") and madness ("Institution Green,") show Vega's familiarity with such beautifully angry writers as Sylvia Plath (The Bell Jar) and Charolette Perkins-Gilman ("The Yellow Wallpaper").

Lyrically, this is Vega's strongest effort yet. The problem with days of open Hand falls in its melodies. Many of its songs slip into background music much too easily. Her music is frighteningly approaching the dreaded "new age" sound.

Yet Vega's album is still much more lively than the sleep inducing, The Caution Horses, from Cowboy Junkies. Much was expected from this Toronto group after their sensationally stark The Trinity Session, which featured a brilliantly stripped-down cover of Lou Reed's "Sweet Jane."

It is this same minimalistic music, taken to the extreme, that ruins Caution Horses. Michael Timmins beautiful poetry is lost in a marsh of monotonous melodies and vocals. Michael's sister, Margo Timmins, never uses her wondrous vocals to their full extent. She seems content to sing in a reserved, frail manner. Most of the songs, save a few country-esque twanging guitars, sound like one long boring sob story.

The opening track, "Sun Comes Up, It's Tuesday Morning," is a poetic masterpiece, in which the bleak melody complements the story of a woman waking up the day after she breaks-up with her lover. Nothing else on the album matches it. The lethargic cover of Neil Young's "Powderfinger" loses all its power and emotion. The song just sits there. As will anyone who listens to this album; that is, until that person falls asleep.

Albums are ranked on a one to five star basis, with five stars being the best.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You and your loved ones are communicating better. Financial matters could create problems if you let them. Although a friend's behavior is puzzling, asking too many questions could spoil a nice surprise.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Writers should produce copy that will excite their publishers. Friendly cooperation will lead to greater domestic harmony. Discuss jointly held funds calmly. Accept a last-minute invitation.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You gain fresh insights from visiting new places and meeting new people. Encourage children to open up by becoming better listeners. Give creative hobbies a whirl - they could become a source of income.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be more patient when dealing with someone who has had a difficult time. Others look to you for guidance. Protect the family unit as only you can. Steer clear of friends' financial schemes.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Cash in on the expertise of a close relative or neighbor. You stand to make sizable gains. Someone who asks your opinion on romantic matters does not rally want your advice. Be discreet.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Do everything you can to restore communication with a relative or associate. Keep a new idea to yourself until you have a chance to try it out. Take advantage of grocery coupons.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Good pals are indispensable now, full of bright ideas and insights!.Curb a tendency to make witty or sarcastic remarks at a friend's expense. Resist the temptation to buy things on impulse.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Romance heats up. Use a close friend as a sounding board; you may get some surprising advice. Write or phone a parent or sibling. Untangle your finances by obtaining a bill-paying loan.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be bold; take that career leap with confidence. Join forces with a strong-minded male. If certain "friends" seem to be manipulating you, give them a wide berth. Relax home this evening.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Travel and money are in the spotlight. Keep your hand out of your wallet. Free-lancing could bring a second income. Remain calm when emergencies arise. Handle one problem at a time.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Business travel is postponed; you are needed at home. Avoid making reckless choices or drastic changes. Squelch a "sour-grapes" mood by dreaming up delightful new ways to say "yes."

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Lady Luck is operating in your favor now. Let no business opportunity pass unexplored. A sympathetic member of the opposite sex can help restore understanding between family members.

had just three goals on the season, two in Arizona and one vs. Dartmouth — not exactly kings of lacrosse.

But as a short stick defensive midfielder, that's not his job. And the notion that the senior co-captain couldn't play defense was just plain absurd.

Meanwhile, Codignotto had earned himself the rep as a scorer, what with 38 goals and only 13 assists coming in.

But with 1:19 left in the game, the Knights had a dozen eggs to wipe of their faces.

Rutgers midfielder David Cunningham had the ball in the attack zone, ready to drive on Feinberg 1-on-1. Feinberg managed to check his stick and knock the ball free, gathered it up and took off.

On the break, Feinberg drove right down the middle, spotting Codignotto at the right post. Feinberg dished off and continued to the net, took the return pass and beat RU goalie John Schmunk.

The goal turned out to be the game-winner in a 12-11 UMass victory, easily the biggest of this 8-3 season.

"They said I was the weakest defender on the field," Feinberg said in disbelief. "Then I stripped him of the ball and took off."

"We've been working on that play all year," said Codignotto, who despite his "lack of passing ability" finished with a career-high four assists.

"We were both lying on the ground and didn't see it go in. Then we heard the crowd and we started celebrating. We were doing 'The Worm' on the field."

Word has it a scout from Syracuse was on hand Saturday night, watching the Gorillas. If so, he'd better be careful about what he says in his report.

And also put armed guards on duty outside the CarrierDome locker rooms next Sunday.

the ensuing faceoff, as it had most of the game (UMass won just 8-of-27), and drove downfield.

But the defense, backed by Kellerman, was able to keep the Knights out of the net, including a last-ditch effort with five seconds left when senior midfielder Tim Soudan was called for a slashing penalty.

"We shut them down totally, that's what won the game," Feinberg said. "We knew we had to tighten the screws. And Teddy Kellerman came up huge."

"Teddy was awesome tonight," Garber said. "Everyone at the beginning of the year was saying, 'What are you going to do without [four-time All-America Sal LoCascio]?' But I have confidence in Teddy and [sophomore] Ray Suris."

For one night, Kellerman was able to make everyone forget Sal What's-his-name.

"I felt good, felt confident," Kellerman said. "I wasn't able to put it together for four quarters before, and tonight I was able to."

But the supporting cast deserves as much of the credit for shutting down a dangerous Rutgers team that had some serious scoring potential, led by midfielder Greg Rinaldi (44 goals in 11 games coming in).

"They were beating us 1-on-1. The close defense did a lot of good work," said Rinaldi, who was held to three goals and an assist. "They executed it well."

"Today the defense was fabulous," Kellerman said. "We ran our slides well and played good man-to-man, nothing stupid. It was a great all-around effort."

"That was our best team defense all year," Garber said.

Save for the second quarter, when Rutgers scored six times, the defense told the story.

Early in the game though, the offense had its share of the limelight, shredding the virtually non-existent Rutgers defense. Soudan scored his first of two goals just 13 seconds into the game, and crisp passing brought goals from Hugh O'Callaghan, Scott Hiller and Codignotto to make it 5-2 at 10:31.

UMass lost a bid to boost that to 6-2 when Soudan's sidewind cannon blast was disallowed because of a crease violation. The Knights took advantage of the blunder and scored six unanswered goals to take control.

Down 5-3 entering the second quarter, Rutgers flurried Kellerman and Co. with five in a span of 4:31 to take an 8-5 lead. Goals by Jim McAleavey (goal, four assists) and Mark Millon helped UM close to 9-7 at the half.

In the third, the Knights looked content to match scoring with the Gorillas, goals by Steve Locker and Rinaldi offsetting scores by Hiller and Frank Pepe. But Hiller's third goal, a one-timer on a great feed from McAleavey with 33 seconds left, put the Gorillas in good shape.

And when Pepe's second goal with 8:55 to play tied the game for the first time since the second quarter, UMass finally had the momentum, and Feinberg and Co. made sure it didn't go to waste.

Gorillas rally past Rutgers

Feinberg nets late goal; Kellerman, D shine in 12-11 victory

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

PISCATAWAY, N.J. – These are supposed to be the new times of college lacrosse – where rule changes have dumped the collective emphasis into the lap of the offense.

So leave it to a pair of defensive players to lead the University of Massachusetts to its biggest win of the season Saturday night.

The Gorillas, fighting an uphill battle all night, got the go-ahead goal from Marc Feinberg with 1:19 to play and held on to stun Rutgers University, 12-11.

UMass has little time to cherish the win, as it faces Boston College tonight at 7 at Alumni Stadium in Chestnut Hill.

Feinberg, a senior co-captain and short stick defensive midfielder, scored just his fourth goal of the season to snap an 11-11 tie.

Meanwhile, the UMass defense set the table by holding the Scarlet Knights scoreless over the final 18:22, bolstered primarily by the stellar effort of junior goalkeeper Ted Kellerman (23 saves).

"That's the hardest we've played all year," said UMass coach Dick Garber. "And to see Marc Feinberg score the winning goal was the thrill of a lifetime."

Feinberg executed the play on both ends of the field, stealing the ball from Knight midfielder David Cunningham and starting on the break. Feinberg then executed a perfect give-n-go with senior attack Rob Codignotto (goal, four assists) and burned RU goalie John Schmunk (19 saves) for the winner.

"This was do-or-die for us," Feinberg said. "We knew if we didn't win, we were out of [the NCAA playoffs]."

The Gorillas (8-3) were able to kill off the remaining time, but not without some tense moments. Rutgers won

Game plan goes awry

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

PISCATAWAY, N.J. – It wasn't one of your more dramatic scouting missions – an excursion of courage that would have had Sean Connery drooling over the script.

In fact, there was no real plan – no synchronized watches, black faces, camouflage and blueprints.

Just boredom.

After all, what's a team to do when it arrives for a game 4 1/2 hours early? Especially when the opposing team is dumb enough to leave its locker room wide open.

So don't fault the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team for managing to sneak into the Rutgers facilities before Saturday night's game and hence, discovering a gold mine.

The Rutgers game plan – spelled out on the chalkboard. Excerpts from it went something like this:

No. 6 – Feinberg, weakest defender on the field, no offensive skills.

No. 9 – Codignotto, "double-team; he won't pass."

Well, talk about opening the old can o' worms . . .

The Scarlet Knights could have had a bit of a case, based on the evidence. Feinberg

Sortino wins 300th

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Staff

When Elaine Sortino first coached the University of Massachusetts softball team way back in 1980, the players wore shorts, played the likes of Boston State, the University of Lowell and Bridgewater and finished the season with a record of 23-3.

In 11 years much has changed for the Minutewomen. They now have uniforms suitable for the agressive play of the Atlantic 10; they now face the stiff compitition of teams such as Cal-Berkeley, San Jose and Frenso State.

As a matter of fact there are very few similarities between the teams of the early 80s and the one that currently suits up for play on Totman Field. Two of those staples are Sortino and winning.

Last Friday, in the first day of play in the Penn State Tournament, Sortino achieved what no other softball coach has done in the history of Massachusetts softball. She coached the Minutewomen to her 300th win, beating George Mason, 5-0.

Since her first season as coach Sortino never, never ever, had a losing season, piloting her teams to a record of 302-135. This season the Minutewomen are 21-16.

In the Penn State Tourney, sophomore Holly Aprile's no-hitter sparked the win over George Mason. She also had an RBI triple and a solo home run in that game.

Also on Friday, the Minutewomen knocked off Boston College, 9-1, before falling to Kent State, 4-1.

On Saturday, it was a solid 2-0 win over Atlantic 10 foe Rutgers behind a one-hitter from Aprile. Later that day, the Minutewomen were eliminated from the tournament by Georgia State, 3-2.

Baseball sweeps Temple

Minutemen clinch bid for Atlantic 10 tourney with four wins

What a difference a year makes.

Last year at this time the University of Massachusetts baseball team was in the midst of controversy. Seven players quit the team near the end of the season. UMass coach Mike Stone's club finished a disappointing 17-27, and missed the playoffs.

Now, after a year's absence from the Atlantic 10 postseason, the Minutemen assured themselves a spot in this season's playoffs.

The Minutemen went to Temple University knowing that three wins would thrust them into the postseason.

Stone's team returns home with four wins under their belts.

In game one, Lou Olivieri's single in the seventh snapped a scoreless tie and propelled the Minutemen to a 1-0 win. Jerry Creamer recorded the win, as he relieved starter Rich Graham who lasted 5 2-3 innings.

The second game on Saturday saw Derek Dana and Brian Bright each belt homers in the UMass 6-4 victory. Bright's blast was his team-leading eighth of the season.

With the game in extra innings, Glenn DiSarcina singled home Drew Comeau (walk) and Olivieri knocked in Dana to give the Minutemen a 6-4 win.

By yesterday, the Minutemen knew they needed only one win to clinch second place in the A-10. In the opener, Temple jumped out to an early 2-0 lead with two runs in the third inning off of Dan O'Leary. O'Leary was injured in the game (nerve injury in his back), and his status for the remainder of the season is unknown as of now.

Dana crossed home with the first UMass run in the fourth when DiSarcina singled to cut the Temple lead to 2-1. Trailing by one, Comeau singled home Bright and was then doubled home by DiSarcina. The Minutemen added another run in the seventh on three straight base hits by Steve Corradi, Ian Torres, and Bright. Jeff Toothaker, who relieved O'Leary, picked up the win which put the Minutemen in the playoffs.

Game four was a shootout. The Minutemen put 14 runs on the board, more then enough for UMass starter Toothaker who won his second game of the day.

The final score read 14-7, and the win gave the Minutemen a 12-4 record in the A-10, 23-16 overall.

Mike Tobin was 3-for-3, and DiSarcina was 3-for-5 in the final conference game of the season.

The Minutemen travel to Maine for a doubleheader with the Black Bears on Tuesday before returning home for their final home game of the season against Amherst College Thursday.

The A-10 playoffs begin May 11 and will be held in Boyertown, Pa.

Protesters bring petition to Duffey

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

Some 25 students from the University of Massachusetts chapter of Hillel marched yesterday from the Student Union to President/Chancellor Duffey's office to deliver a petition with more than 700 signatures which denounced comparisons made in the campus media between Israel and the Republic of South Africa.

The march was also a response to an incident that occurred Thursday on the Whitmore ramp where unidentified students placed an Israeli flag and a South African flag on the ground forcing people going into the building to walk on the flags.

The Hillel students said since the disclosure last month of University held investments in companies with ties to South Africa, Israel has been labeled an apartheid state by students contributing to the Collegian Editorial/Opinion page.

"Calling Israel an apartheid state is dead wrong," said Gadi Karmi, an Israeli exchange student at UMass. "It's an attempt to destroy Israel."

In the original story published in the Collegian, the University held, as investments, stocks or bonds in ten companies and Israel. The Israeli bonds were given to the University as a gift.

After the article was published University Treasurer Robert Brand said the University would sell the bonds.

However, in a statement released Friday, Duffey said the bonds would not be sold and would be kept until maturity.

"Some students and others have attempted to divide this community by making charges comparing the state of Israel and the government of South Africa," Duffey said. "Such comparisons are improper, offensive and inaccurate."

University investment policy forbids the purchase of stocks or bonds in companies which conduct business in countries with apartheid systems.

Several students said at the march held yesterday on Yom HaAtzma'vt or Israeli Independence Day that the conflict on this campus and in Israel is best solved not by 'name-calling' but by communication.

"Peace is not calling each other names, said Aaron Silverman, a sophomore bachelors degree in individual concentration major. "The way to peace is through trust."

The flags were covered with red paint, which students said symbolized blood. They were removed after Hillel called the police and asked them to remove the flags, said Randi Dubno, president of Hillel.

Duffey refuses to sell UMass' Israeli bonds

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

In the wake of the controversy surrounding the University's possession of Israeli bonds, President/Chancellor Duffey released a statement Friday rejecting demands that those bonds be sold.

"I wish to make it quite clear that we reject the arguments made by those students and others that these [Israeli] bonds be sold," Duffey said. "I repeat once more what I said about this matter some days ago: State of Israel Bonds currently held by the University will not be sold. The University intends to hold these bonds to maturity."

On April 18, administrators working in conjunction with students who challenge University investments, decided to aid students in asking Duffey and the board of trustees to determine if investments in Israel violate University policy.

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson said yesterday that Duffey's statement is "clearly his own statement" exhibiting Duffey's personal belief that the holding of Israeli bonds does not violate the University investment policy.

"I believe clarification is still needed on the question of apartheid policies," he said, adding that he still intends to work with students to prepare a statement to issue to the board of trustees.

Duffey's statement continued: "Some students and others have attempted to divide this community by making charges comparing the state of Israel and the government of South Africa. Such comparisons are improper, offensive and inaccurate."

The tragic divisions in the Middle East must be seen in their own context," he added, "Those who would use the continuing historic divisions and denial of justice in South Africa as an excuse to promote divisions and racial antagonism in America are misguided."

Noon rally to respond to homophobia on UMass campus

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

Twelve representives from various University of Massachusetts campus groups, adminstration and students are scheduled speak tomorrow at a noon rally on the Student Union steps to show support for the UMass lesbian, bisexual and gay community.

According to Benjamin Eder, of the Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance, the focus of the rally will be to show the administration's support and make demands for the homosexual community in the wake of last week's "Straight Pride" rally.

"It's one thing to speak against homophobia, it's time the administration acted against it," Eder said.

He said the LBGA will present the adminstration the following demands:

- That the adminstration release a declaration of support clearly defining the homophobic harassment policy and the disciplinary action that will be taken if it is broken.
- That disciplinary action be taken against the students involved in the disruption of Arthur Keene's Anthropology 206 class.
- That a diversity course dealing with issues of social oppression will be made a requirement for graduation.
- The establishment of an interdisciplinary Gay/Lesbian/Bisexual Program at UMass, which some of the classes offered will fulfill general education requirements.
- The placement of GLB people on all future multicultural committees.

GEO faces new obstacle in union fight

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts administrators and the Graduate Employee Organization are faced with a new problem from the Board of Regents of Higher Education, which may slow the fight to hold a union election of graduate students.

Susan Pearson, director of academic administration and the administration's chief negotiator, was informed by a staff member of the Regents on Friday that unless the GEO goes before the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission and comes under the state collective bargaining statute, there is no need for involvement by the Regents.

This means that Chancellor/President Duffey may still call for a union election although without union authorization from the MLRC, the Regents will not recognize the new union.

The MLRC authorizes, operates and certifies union elections. In order to become a union – a collective bargaining agent – the MLRC must certify the union.

Rape reported Sat. in parking Lot 22

The University of Massachusetts Department of Public Safety received a call at 3:24 a.m. Saturday reporting an alleged rape of a UMass student in Lot 22.

Lot 22 is located between the Southwest Residential Area and Warren G. McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

Police responded to the scene to assist the victim.

The Community Disorders Unit, a branch of UMass department of public safety, is investigating the matter.

Police request that anyone with information concerning suspicious or unusual activity in Lot 22 contact the police at 545-0893.

- The hiring of one full-time clerical staff person for the Program for Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Concerns.
- The institutionalization of the "diversity corridor," the only specialty corridor for gay, lesbian and bisexual students to live on campus.
- The funding of a pamphlet about gay, lesbian and bisexual life at UMass which will be included in all packets which are given to prosepective students.
- As part of the New Students Program, a mandatory presentation which deals with issues of diversity on campus including the lesbian, bisexual and gay community.
- The hiring of an openly gay male therapist in Mental Health Services.
- The movement of the Program for GLB Concerns office from Southwest to somewhere more central on campus to make it more accessible to the students, faculty and staff at UMass.
- The establishment of a task force for gays, lesbians and bisexuals.

The rally will feature Dennis Madson, vice chancellor of Student Affairs; Sue Gordon from the BOG; Natasha Diephius, president-elect of the SGA; in addition, speakers from the Dean of Students Office, Student Activities Office, Hillel, the Provost Office and Residential Education, he said.

The rally will look at homophobia, Eder said, but will also include socially oppressed groups to show that groups can work together to overcome oppression.

"Our specific problems may differ, but we have similar problems overall," he said.

According to Eder, several members of the lesbian, bisexual and gay community were "seriously upset" by last Tuesday's "Straight Pride" rally, which was held by the Young Americans for Freedom.

"What they were doing was speaking out against homosexuality, it was a very hostile atmosphere," he said. "We're not speaking out against heterosexuality, but homophobia."

Traci Davis reflects on a year as SGA president

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

"You have to learn to pick your battles wisely. And you have to realize that running for an office means having high beliefs, faith in the system and an ability to change the system that might change your view."
— Traci Davis

Traci Davis stepped down from her position as Student Government Association president last month, having conquered such feats as regaining respect for the SGA body and for the students on the University of Massachusetts campus.

Prior to Davis' victory it had been a year of definitive controversy in the SGA. There had been great reluctance to ratify the election of Shari Silkoff and Jason Rabinowitz as co-presidents of the SGA, and SGA Speaker Robert Fadel served as president in the interim.

"There was certain area government mismanagement. The senate was a circus. We had to regain respect from the administration, and reassure the students that we were student leaders," Davis said.

Davis is modest when reminded of the fact that she was the first Black woman to hold the president's position, and said it may have been a factor in receiving votes.

However, she does not think it has been a major factor when she made decisions.

> "It was an interesting year. It's always tough being the first one scrutinized. Some might say you're stressing 'your issue' too much."
> – Traci Davis

She said as president, she represents all students when dealing with the administration and the senate. Davis said she realized criticism would arrive from all segments of the racial community and that a fine line had to be drawn between what her background is and what she needed to put forth to the public.

"I was not only 'Traci Davis' anymore, once elected I was 'SGA President.' I feel comfortable that I've maintained that line."

She said at times it was difficult to maintain friendships because some of her views changed with her new position while others were strengthened.

"I may have lost touch at some points, but I had to [in order] to remain effective.

She finds she has changed in some ways and attributes the change to what she was facing.

"I play the political games better now," she said. "I've had to take student concerns and translate them for the administrators."

Davis said the actions of a few students can create stereotypes of students that are seen as the rule by the administration.

"For example: the alcohol policy. They don't realize that the students live in these dorms. [Students] have a right to privacy. The administrators can not deal with undergraduates.

"It was an interesting, but tough year," Davis said. "It's always tough being the first one scrutinized. Some might say you're stressing 'your issue' too much."

Davis said she could not run her campaign on a single issue; instead she stressed campus safety, racial tensions, administrative response to students and campus issues and student empowerment.

She said the reason these issues have remained ones of great campus concern is that lines of discussion were opened, and it needs to be continued until a solution is reached.

Davis said she is excited for the coming year and what it will bring, and offered some advice to individuals who won the student government elections and to students in general.

"Once you win that title, you are that person all the time. You have to learn to chose your battles wisely or else you lose your effectiveness."

As far as her own battles, she said disclosure will come after the terms of the following few presidents ends.

"I'm tired and ready to return to 'normal,' but happy I've had this opportunity," Davis said.

Women urged to enter 'public sphere'

Dean lectures on need for women in administration

By DIANE HICKS
Collegian Staff

Jo-Anne Vanin, dean of students at the University of Massachusetts, yesterday encouraged women to pool their resources and knowledge and employ these assets in the "public sphere" of their careers in the higher education system.

Vanin's lecture titled: "Women in Higher Education: Integrating Self and Work," was sponsored by the Faculty Senate Council on the Status of Women.

The council works to combat the impact of budget cuts on women, and campus safety as well as on the University Child Care Program.

She said there are two spheres in our society: the public arena, where emphasis is on the individual, and competition is the strong motivator, and the private arena, which Vanin said is a more nurturing and collaborative setting.

Vanin said women generally feel more comfortable with the latter and this is why women often are not inclined to compete for administrative positions in higher education.

"Women represent an untapped source" of leaders for the higher education system, Vanin said, adding that "women in higher education are clustered at the bottom of the pyramid."

"Women are making progress slowly and painfully," she said. However, she said, that as we enter the 90s there is not the same increase in administrative positions held by women that there was in the 80s.

Discussing a study of college presidents in New England, Vanin said the typical female college president tends to be 53 years old, White, with a Ph.D in the humanities or education.

Although the female president's formal education is similar to their male counterparts, the women usually end up administrating in Catholic institutions, and for different reasons than the males, Vanin said.

Many women do not plan to become college presidents, she said.

"The idea of being a server to others was a strong motivator for all of the women [presidents in the study]," Vanin said.

She quoted one of the women in the study as saying, "I felt an obligation to take on the responsibility because the opportunity doesn't come to women very often."

Vanin said: "Each of the women [in the study] had a vision. These women looked at the world through a lens of connections," she said, adding that theirs was a "desire to work in a collaborative manner with others."

"The inclusion of the ideas and concerns of women bring a new set of priorities to higher education," she said.

UM computer prof. to speak tonight

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts Professor Edward M. Riseman, known for his developments in Computer Vision Technology, is scheduled to speak about his work tonight at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

His presentation titled: "Through the Robot's Eye," is part of the 1989-90 Distinguished Faculty Series.

Riseman is the director of the Computer Vision Laboratory, a part of the Computer and Information Science Department. Riseman founded the laboratory in 1978. The laboratory is involved with the research of image interpretation, motion analysis and mobile robots.

Riseman's research in computer vision developed the ability of a computer to analyze images and to recognize scenes and objects projected by a camera.

Rich Weiss, a research associate at the laboratory, said Riseman will speak about the general problems in making a computer see. He will also discuss how Computer Vision Technology can be developed for navigational purposes, Weiss said.

Besides founding the laboratory, Riseman also started two Amherst businesses, the VI Corporation and Amerinex Artificial Intelligence.

"The VI Corporation sells a graphic package that allows people to design interfaces," Weiss said. "The Amerinex Artificial Intelligence produces a tool for building computer systems."

Anti-semitic, racist graffiti found on campus

By PAMELA PERRAULT
Collegian Correspondent

The Community Disorders Unit of the Department of Public Safety, which investigates civil rights violations filed with University of Massachusetts police, is investigating two matters of graffiti reported since Friday.

Janitors discovered Friday anti-Semitic graffiti written on study tables on the 20th floor of the Tower Library.

UMass police were called Sunday to the basement of McNamara Residence Hall in response to racially offensive spray-painted graffiti.

In other police reports:

"This does not change anything radically," Pearson said. "It is now just a campus relationship. It does not change the relationship we wanted."

The administration has steadfastly wanted an informal union of graduate students rather than a union recognized by the Regents. Administrators have said a union would complicate negotiations rather than initiate dialogue with the administration.

Because the MLRC said in 1979 that graduate student employees could not form a union, the GEO has been trying to sidestep the commission by going to the Regents for an election. The Regents several weeks ago approved an election but again sent the group to the MLRC for approval.

The two parties have been meeting over the past two weeks in an effort to come to a resolution on three stipulations.

The GEO wants the administration and all University officials to remain impartial during the election process. The administration has requested the GEO sign a 'no-strike' clause forbidding the organization from holding a work action.

The GEO, an affiliate of District 65/United Auto Workers, also wants the administration to support its cause before the MLRC.

Neither side has been willing to budge on any of the terms.

The two sides plan to meet again today from 12:30 to 3 p.m.

When you're the best in LSAT prep you get a lot of free advertising.

Why do many LSAT prep "experts" keep comparing themselves to Kaplan in their ads? Because they don't want you to start comparing with real facts and figures.

If you did, you'd discover that more Ivy League law students prepared at Kaplan than anywhere else. You'd discover the world's largest test prep research staff, the most up-to-date materials, the most comprehensive computerized diagnostic program.

You'd discover that you never have to miss a class—either review lessons with an instructor or with our LSAT prep tapes. And that we'll never close you out of a course because we can add classes to fill students' needs.

You'd discover that our LSAT prep is, and always has been, guaranteed. And lastly, that Kaplan students are well-represented among those who score the most.

So call. Enroll. You'll discover just why Kaplan is students' first choice for LSAT prep—and other companies' first choice for imitation.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted

What I have learned at UMass

A friend asked me a great question the other day.

He asked, "What have you learned here? I mean, really."

Well, I pondered for a moment, sat back on my haunches for another, and didn't have a ready-made answer. My ability to reveal the highlights of four years of education in a few words seemed impossible in the late afternoon sun of an 80-degree day.

David R. Mark

Having spent some time thinking, I've come up with this:

Since I've been at the University of Massachusetts, I've learned a lot.

How? Well for starters, I've seen the Collegian get taken over and laughed at. At other times it's been cheered and respected. I've learned that mistakes happen, and have explained that to others, sometimes successfully. I've worked with more than 500 people at this newspaper, including some now-successful journalists, and several more who will be successful upon graduation. Maybe even me. But what else?

I've met the hypersensitive and the insensitive, the racially-aware and the racists. I've seen people laughed at for who they are, and I've seen people tell jokes about Blacks, homosexuals or the disabled among "friends," all the time checking to see that no one from the said group was nearby. I've seen a riot, several building takeovers and a lot of angry students.

I've taken on members of the administration. Sometimes I've won, sometimes I've lost. I've done the same with student leaders with equal results. I've learned to empathize with some people who run this school, while ridiculing others behind their back.

I've had my heart broken and broken others. I've been hurt and hurt others. I've learned that sometimes no matter how hard you try, you can never say the right things to some people. I've taken responsibility and I've dished it out. I've been yelled at and yelled at others. I've been praised and done the same.

I've taught others things from classes in political science and economics, while asking others to help me with my deficiencies in physics and "Introduction to Logic." I've learned the power of teamwork and tried to show that power to others.

I've run a rally and been to several others. I've started arguments and been the subject of others. Occasionally I've tried to make other people feel bad or guilty, as I'm sure they've done with me. I've learned that if you don't pay your bills, you get into trouble, and that the library is a place where a world of knowledge is stored. I've learned also that the library is a great place to take a nap before finding that world of knowledge.

I've learned why I never made my high school (or UMass) hoop teams (no defensive skills and an inconsistent jump shot), but had the pleasure of stripping Lorenzo Sutton of the ball as he went in for a lay-up in a game at Southwest last August.

I learned more exists in an education than the three Rs. I learned that there are some things I'll never be able to convince other people of, and that there are other things people will never get me to agree to. I've learned it's impossible not to end a sentence every now and then with a preposition.

I've learned that if you work hard enough some of your dreams will come true. I've learned this is not the case with my entomology tests and a few other things on campus.

I've made friends and I've lost friends, but the ones who have stuck with me for our entire stay at UMass hopefully realize that while I have a tendency to be naive and talk too much, I mean well and have never acted maliciously. For the ones who teased me too often, I forgive you and hope you find me in these waning days of our education. Oh, yeah — I've learned there are some people I can never be friends with, sometimes their fault, sometimes mine.

Education. If there's one thing I have learned in four years at UMass, it's that I've learned almost everything outside the classroom, and will never be able to thank enough people.

For those of you who have read my columns for four years (since Sept. 11, 1986) with a positive response, you're brave souls. Thanks, goodbye and good luck.

David R. Mark is, for the last time, a Collegian columnist

The Editorial Desk would like to apologize for typesetting errors which occurred in the Graphics department.

A paragraph was printed twice in Margaret Magner's column ("Centralized power of residential administration must end," April 24). "Iran" was also misspelled.

A quote attributed to journalist Colman McCarthy in Melisa Canli's column ("Armenian genocide exaggerated," April 30) was only partially italicized. The quote should have extended up to the paragraph ending in "Even if historians agreed about genocide, today's Turkish government has no political or philosophical ties to the old Ottoman Empire."

The Editorial Desk regrets any distress these errors may have caused, to both readers and the respective writers.

Confusion, insecurity underlies column

The article, " 'Asian Night' disgraces histories and cultures represented", (Minu Sebastian, April 27) was obviously the result of much confusion and insecurity on her behalf.

Confused in that she did not understand her own heritage, that of Asian-Americans. She starts off her article by confessing that she is "an Asian-American woman who is just beginning to understand what it means to be a 'person of color'." Insecure in that she was so caught up in her new self-image of being a "person of color" that she was scared she'd lose it by our exhibit of the Americans within us.

"Asian-American" is a culture structured on two foundations, that of Asia's and of America's. As Asian-Americans, we are not ashamed of our Asian heritage nor are we ashamed of our assimilation into American heritage. We are the cross-breeds of two powerful cultures and are not afraid of displaying ourselves.

Sebastian's greatest criticism of Asian Night was the modern fashion show. She criticized two aspects of this event, one; she felt that it was contradictory to our goals, and two; she felt that we were exploiting Asian women.

My argument holds that there is no contradiction in this modern fashion show. These clothes are as much a part of us as our traditional clothes. This fashion show was simply the American side of our Asian-American selves.

As for the alleged exploitation of the Asian women, I'd like to point out a couple of facts. One, there were as many men in that fashion show as there were women. And two, the men there were equally if not more 'exploited' (if this is the word she chooses to use) than the women. Many times people tend to see only what they choose to see, therefore twisting the facts and incorporating them into their own beliefs.

Ms. Sebastian, if you choose to fight for women's rights, I praise you, but please, do it within the contexts where it is plausible.

I'd like to commend you in your attempt to defend the Asian-American cause, but next time, before you go public with your thoughts, sit back, relax, check out the facts, observe the world in which you live, look in the mirror and re-check your premises.

Survivor of rape speaks out

I have held a deep dark secret for many, many years, and I've realized that I am something of a liar.

Some people on this campus know it, several probably suspect it, and the majority of people here, including most of my close friends, have absolutely no idea.

Lisa Shapiro

I have always loved to write, and have always wanted to be a novelist. I had a particular story, a long and painful chapter of my life, that I have often tried to shape into a novel.

But I was hit with several stumbling blocks.

My first few tries at a novel were in high school, but one of my main problems was that there were important parts of my story that I just couldn't remember. For this reason, there were vital information and explanations absent from my first manuscripts.

In my senior year of high school, those pieces of information began to pose enormous problems in my life, and I sought help to work them out.

During the past year, I have written many, many stories — articles where you read the facts, and nothing but them. Nothing about me. That's exactly the kind of writing I was looking for.

My sorority sisters have often asked me about when I was going to write a column for this newspaper. I laughed, and said probably never. I was scared of even the tiniest bit of "me" appearing on a printed page.

Now, as my time at the University is just about up, I feel it is time to talk.

The secret is that eight years ago, at age 13, I was raped by a friend of my family's who lived in our house.

My relationship with that man, who was six years my senior, lasted for more than three years after that fateful afternoon. But the details are far too complicated to discuss.

It was not violent, and it took me six years to even consider what happened on my very own TV room couch a rape.

A few years ago, I led myself to believe that I had accepted it as just another part of my life, and that I had no reason to ever want to tell people about it.

That was okay.

But today, I'm tired of it. I'm tired of pretending that things are different than they really are. I'm tired of answering the (most) always dreaded question, "At what age did you lose your virginity?" with a half-truth or a lie.

Saying "young" just doesn't cut it anymore.

There have been many occasions, whether in class or talking with friends, when I just wanted to open my mouth and comment from the heart of personal experience.

But I never have been able to.

I have talked about issues surrounding rape, written papers on the subject, and on Friday watched hundreds of women "Take back the night." I have also written about women reporting rape on campus to the University police.

But even while thinking about the subject, I have never identified myself with what I really am — a survivor of rape.

What I seek today is certainly not pity or sympathy, but liberation and vindication from this self-imposed sentence of silence.

My hope now is that, when people here look at me or talk to me, they see the real me — secrets included.

Battle of the co-rec sexists

Ahhhh, the American pastime — baseball.

The game that fills us with sentiment and enthusiasm.

Out of our love for this American sport, people anxiously wait for the weather to turn sunny and balmy so they can join the thousands of leagues and teams across the country.

Meredith O'Brien

These leagues provide opportunities for people who may not be the best, most athletic of beings, to participate in the game they love so much.

Even at UMass, the game of baseball/softball is not limited to the grace and talents of our own varsity teams. Hundreds of people take part in intramural softball leagues every spring. Whole residence hall floors, groups of co-workers and groups of friends band together, to form teams for a few weeks of fun.

The folks here at the Collegian are not exempt from this desire to play ball. We have formed our own co-ed team joining the UMass Co-Recreational league.

So far we have done pretty well — 3-0 (actually 4-0 because we beat the BOG in our own non-league game that the Sports department neglected to do a story on.) We have practices and a substantial amount of team spirit. We play fairly and treat every player as an equal.

There's only one problem — apparently the Intramural Department does not view our team as equally and fairly as we do.

Simply because we include women in our roster, the Intramural Department deems it proper that we play a somewhat easier, unchallenging version of our favorite pastime.

As a team in the co-rec league, we are forced to play with a huge, awkward 16-inch circumference ball (the average softball has a circumference of 12 inches). We have to pitch to our own team. We only get one pitch — lousy, rolling on the ground, above your head — you have to swing at it or you're out. A foul ball or a swing and a miss and you're out.

The men's intramural teams play by the regular softball rules — except the number of strikes and balls are one less to make the game shorter.

You see, the Intramural Department feels that women, on the same team with men, could not handle using a regular softball. Their dainty, fragile hands could not possibly catch a ball and withstand the ferociousness of a man's hit.

Women must be so weak that they could not possibly endure standing up at the plate for the full amount of pitches as they do in the men's league.

What these sexist and protectionist rules do is take the challenge away from the game. It is degrading to play in a league that tries to make the game "easier" because of your gender.

When faced with our first game, I asked our referee if both our team and our opponent agreed to use a regular-sized softball, could we forego using the cannonball?

He said though he thought the rules in the co-rec league were sexist, he could not allow us to play with a regular softball.

Our Collegian team practices with a regular ball. We played our BOG game with a regular ball. We wanted to make our team one that played fairly and treated everyone with respect. By treating every player on our team with equal importance, we can enjoy the mystique that playing the American pastime brings.

Well, you all-knowing members of the Intramural Department, why should we be robbed the opportunity of playing a fair and challenging game simply because women are players?

ARTS & LIVING

'Toonist talks of 'Dykes'

By ALI WOOLWICH
Collegian Staff

Alison Bechdel, renowned Lesbian cartoonist and creator of "Dykes to Watch Out For," spoke and showed a slide show of her cartoons in University of Massachusetts Mahar Auditorium on Sunday evening to an enthusiastic crowd of over 250 people as a benefit for the UMass Program for Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Concerns.

An avid artist all her life, Bechdel showed drawings ranging from her early childhood through high school and college and continuing to the present. She noted that almost all of her early characters were male/androgenous figures. She said that was an example of how media conditions people to think of women as something other than human.

She showed a picture of Mickey and Minnie Mouse and pointed out that with this couple, as with many cartoon characters, the original character is assumed male, and 'to make it female," long eyelashes, high heeled shoes, bows, etc. are added.

As a college art student, Bechdel said she benefitted from human life drawing classes, which she said helped her to make her current cartoon characters more lifelike.

Bechdel created "Dykes to Watch Out For," a cartoon consisting of all lesbian characters, in letters to a friend she wrote in 1983. Friends encouraged her to have some of her drawings printed in the feminist newspaper, Womannews. This, she said, legitimized her work and encouraged her to work even harder. Part of this challenge was in creating steady characters that could be repeatedly drawn.

In 1986, her first book of cartoons was published by Firebrand Books. By this time her cartoons were being printed in numerous feminist, progressive and gay/lesbian news publications. Today, the number has reached over 25 publications worldwide, including the local Valley Women's Voice.

The politically active Bechdel has done cartoons for pro-choice and AIDS awareness publications, and incorporates important events in gay life, such as the 1987 March on Washington, D.C. for Gay Rights into her regular strip.

The main focus of Bechdel's cartoons is the reality and humor of the everyday life of gay and lesbian people. "Truth can be a lot of things ... tragic, fearful ... but I see a lot of humor in it," she said.

She is currently working on a new strip about the members of a gay and lesbian newspaper, with three female and three male characters, called "Service to the Cause."

Visibility is also an important point to Bechdel; by documenting the humor of everyday gay and lesbian life she hopes to make it more widely understood and accepted.

At the end of her presentation, she took questions from the audience which ranged from appreciative "thank you"s for her portrayal of the range in ages, races and life styles of lesbians, to suggestions of material for future strips.

After the show, flocks lined up to get her autograph on her newest collection of cartoons, "New and Improved Dykes to Watch Out For," which has just been released by Firebrand Books.

You're sitting in a big plush office. A balding fat, White man looms across a wooden desk glaring at you. You are completely qualified for this job that you are about to be interviewed for. The fat man behind the desk has read your resume and is very impressed. You are a shoo-in for the job. You are on the verge of being economically secure for the rest of your life.

That is, until you showed up for the interview.

As the big boss man stares at your blue jeans and t-shirt, his face turns red and veins begin to bulge from his mammoth forehead. He makes a quick motion to the door and you meekly exit.

You have blown it. You have all the tools to make it in corporate America. You work hard and you know your stuff, but you just can't get a grasp on all this image stuff. You don't know the difference between a power tie and a power drill.

But now all that is going to change. On Thursday, May 3, the University Business Club is sponsoring The Power of Professional Images in the '90s, a student workshop that will teach the future Yuppies of America social skills and how to dress for success.

The event will be held in Campus Center 163C.

Karen Willard, chairperson of the University Business Club, feels the workshop is vital for graduating seniors.

"Once you get out of school," she said, "you might fall flat on your face if you don't know the rules of the game."

Willard also said other universities, such as the Stetson School of Florida, offer entire semester workshops on such things as 'interviewing rhetoric' and 'power etiquette.'

The event will begin at 7 p.m. when UMass fashion marketing professor, Catharine Porter will deliver a lecture titled "Creating the Professional Image."

This will be followed by the serving of hors' doerves. Among the trendy finger foods will be chocolate dipped fruit, stuffed mushrooms and a vegetable platter. All will be served on China.

The fun will continue at 8:30 p.m., when Scott Patton, store manager of the men's clothing store, House of Walsh, will speak on building a man's wardrobe.

Elizabeth DeCourney, store manager of Casual Corner, will then take the spotlight, talking about the woman's wardrobe.

The evening will culminate at 10 p.m. with a raffle that will include all the essentials a business person will need; attache cases, resume service and free tailoring.

Tickets for the event are $1 for UBC members and $2 for everyone else.

Mind reader at SUB

You've seen these types on all kinds of talk shows – they seem to have the ability to read the future, they're able to rattle off the names of half the audience after hearing them only once. They're the few gifted with extra sensory perception, commonly known as ESP.

Supposedly, we all have the capability to read minds, we're just not in tune to our "sixth" sense enough to cultivate this ability. However, 31-year-old Ronnie Romm has succeeded in doing so.

Romm is currently one of the country's most sought after entertainers. Skilled at ESP, Romm incorporates audience participation with a twist of comedy to keep the crowd in amazement, and in stitches.

Romm attributes his unusual capabilities to a speech impediment. During his early childhood years he stuttered, and felt that since one sense was impared, his "sixth" sense had been strengthened.

Like most who possess the gift of ESP, Romm's speciality is his ability to reveal numbers, names and the personal thoughts of his audience with startling accuracy.

Romm has performed to enthusiastic critical acclaim at colleges, conventions, cruises, clubs and resorts all over the country. When he performs, he commands the attention of his listeners and guides his participants into his world of mystery and fun.

Ronnie Romm will be performing in the Student Union Ballroom tonight, at 8 p.m. The event is sponsored by the Greek Area Council. Admission is $2 for Greeks and $3 for non-Greeks.

What to do if you are graduating and don't want to have a career

Taking Off: Extraordinary Ways to Spend Your First Year Out of College
Lauren Tarshis
Fireside

Too many people today graduate from college and immediately put on the business suit and find some job that makes them look constipated for the rest of their lives.

Some people, including yours truly, are just not ready to enter the cut-throat world business world. These people don't want to wear red suspenders and grey suits and dresses. They're not out to rake in hoards of money for themselves at the expense of others. They only want to have some fun, experience a new and different lifestyle, and help people out who need it.

It's for these people that Lauren Tarshis wrote the wonderfully fresh Taking Off. This book offers something for anyone, whether you want to go overseas, work in community villages, doing inner-city work, or working in the great outdoors.

Perhaps you'd like to teach English in China or Japan, or maybe you'd enjoy living in a kibbutz in Israel or working at a YMCA in Taiwan. This book tells you how you can do it.

But maybe you'd like to stay in your own country. No problem. Maybe you'd like become a park volunteer, or help political prisoners through Jubilee Partners, or teach Sioux Indians at the Red Cloud Indian School. Maybe building houses for the poor through Habitat for Humanity is more your speed, or working with children at St. Jude's Ranch, or inner-city kids at City Volunteer Corps.

The job I found is with Innisfree Villages, a community village in rural Virginia. About 15 miles away from anything else remotely human, the volunteers at Innisfree work with mentally challenged adult co-workers in baking bread, farming, weaving and woodworking. Apparently, no prior experience with working with mentally challenged is necessary, since I have none. Although the stipend is miniscule ($150 a month), the free housing (volunteers live with co-workers) and food, accompanied with the rewards of working and living with such beautiful people are far more important than the commercial profits most people (including people who work for his paper) desire.

For every different opportunity, Tarshis offers a two or three page description of the job and atmosphere. She then offers a summary box, which includes pros and cons, as well as other pertinent information, such as time and service commitments and financial compensation.

You graduate from college only once. After that, it's hello business world and good-bye fun. There should be more to life. There is more to life. Just go out and find it. Don't fall into the corporate trap. Don't become a robot who takes orders from a corrupt boss at the expense of others. One Oliver North in this country is enough. You have your entire life to be part of the commercial myth we call the American Dream. In the meantime, while you're still young, while you still have the fire, do something that you truly give a damn about. Make a difference. That's what this book is all about.

Taking Off is available at the University Store and other local bookstores.

Rap act plays pond

UPC has announced that the New Jersey-based rap diva Queen Latifah will be performing at this year's spring pond concert.

Headlining the show will be Ziggy Marley and the Melody Makers, who'll be playing along with Violent Femmes, Throwing Muses and Hearts and Minds.

Queen Latifah's critically-lauded debut album, All Hail the Queen, ingeniously mixes rap, reggae, R and B and house, and features appearances by such rap stars as KRS-One from Boogie Down Productions and members of De La Soul.

Latifah also accompanied David Bowie on "Fame 90," the re-mix of his 1975 hit "Fame."

The name "Latifah" is Arabic for "delicate and sensitive," and was given to her at the age of eight by a Muslim cousin. "The name stayed with me," Latifah explains. "It has nothing to do with rank. It has to do with how I feel spiritually."

A talented stage performer, Queen Latifah's dynamic vocals and dance routines have critics both here and abroad raving. Of her performance at the 1989 New Music Seminar, a Blitz magazine critic wrote, "Queen Latifah electrified the sullen assemblage with a staggering in-your-face set."

"People don't think rappers can also be musicians or singers," Latifah says, "but who says you can't break those rules? It's time to shock the world."

Artist celebrates Earth

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

Even though the environmental messages of last Sunday's hyped-up, international Earth Day celebration will most likely be thrown out with tomorrow's garbage, one person still feels the Earth should be our highest priority.

Amy Porchelli, deciding the Earth's beauty should be revered and coveted, devoted her senior art thesis project to the Earth. Her collection of seven oil paintings, entitled "Earth as Sacred,"feature orchard trees in different seasons.

Porchelli, a senior art major who came to UMass on a Chancellor's Scholarship, said, "Painting about nature allows me to be honest with myself. My role as an artist is to contribute individual my ideas about people's concerns and express them through paint."

Seeing that saving the Earth seems to be a popular, bandwagon issue, she said it is the responsibility of artists to respect and learn from the Earth in their works.

"Things die and then come back to life," she said, adding that spring's rebirth gives people a positive outlook on life; that life, like the seasons, is continually changing and developing.

The orchards featured in her paintings, inspired by her two and a half years living in Orchard Hill, Porchelli said represent life-affirming strength and duration in nature.

Her favorite piece, "Passage," shows a combination of all life giving qualities.

"I used colorful heavy paint and texture on [the painting] to show fertility," she said. "And this was the first one that I used water in to show the lushness of nature."

In "Passage," as in all of the pieces, Porchelli said she subtly stroked crosses into the orchard branches to show the Earth's spirituality and sanctity.

She worked on the seven pieces simultaneously, propping them up on the walls and on the floor of her studio.

"I wanted to surround myself with the paintings so when I thought of something I wanted to add to another painting I'd just go over and add it," she said. "[By working on the paintings in a circle] I was able to feel a continuity."

Porchelli's exhibit opens today at the Student Union Art Gallery from 5-7 p.m. Her project is one of four of the UMass Arts Council's Two Women – Two Men exhibition. The paintings will be on display today through May 4.

Club Comm. carnival for cool cause

By NOA BEN-YEHUDA
Collegian Correspondent

Re-live your childhood days of eating sticky amusement park cotton-candy and winning goldfish while helping Club Communication raise money for children with chronic diseases at the same time, tomorrow night in the Student Union Ballroom.

All ages are invited to Club Communication's carnival and concert Wednesday, from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m., which will benefit the Ronald McDonald Children's Charities of Western Massachusetts.

Admission is free and tickets for games (the dunking machine!) and food will be sold 5 for $1. A mirror maze, golf putt, shave the balloon game, and a collection of all those theme park activities will be set up all day.

At 9 p.m. the ballroom will re-open for a benefit concert by local favorites, Rockin' Dave and the Rent Party. The Rent Party's hot zydeco sound, featuring Rockin' Dave on accordion, has earned them the reputation as the band that induces the most sweat from fans during their concerts. Tickets for the show can be purchased for $4 at Tickets Unlimited.

"This event is sure to be a lot of fun for kids of all ages." said Gail McLaughlin, President of Club Communication.

The Ronald Mcdonald Children's Charities is a non-profit foundation that provides grants for housing and care of children with chronic illness and their families. Hospital expenses can be astronomical for such families particularly when they must travel for treatments. The RMCC has helped provide a home away from home in many instances. Since it inception, RMCC has awarded 650 grants totalling over $23 million.

McLaughlin said she couldn't be sure how much money the carnival would raise. "It's the first time a student-run organization has pulled together to do something of this magnitude for a childrens' charity" McLaughlin said. "But if just 500 people come and spend $2 we will have raised $1,000."

If you attend, you may be a winner as well as a fundraiser. Prizes donated from local businesses ranging from haircuts to an evening at Carmelina's for the Carnival raffle. You might also get an peek at Ronald McDonald himself, who is rumored to be scheduled for an afternoon appearance. Sorry, Grimace has a previous engagement.

And just think . . . how long has it been since your last sno-cone?

Students affected by budget cuts

By TANYA R. WILSON
Collegian Correspondent

Budget cuts at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst are affecting not only the students financially, but also students' learning ability.

A serious problem is at hand — students are paying exhorbitant fees to attend the University in order to acquire knowledge and better prepare for careers. These students have the inspiration and ability to learn, but in some cases there just are not enough teachers or classes are doubled up so the students who really need the courses are not able to get into them.

Donna Payne, an accounting and economics major is noticing problems that never had occurred in her department before the budget cuts began. She said the requirements in economics have changed.

Usually to take a course in the major, a person could take the course until you acquired a "C." She said, now there are limits to complete a course. Payne said she feels because of the lack of teachers, she is not getting the education she needs and deserves.

"I tend to reflect back on lower level courses because I don't believe I could get the help I need in the higher level classes, nor the adequate amount of time I need to spend with a teacher. And I do not want it to reflect in my grades," Payne said.

In order to solve some of the financial problems at UMass, Payne said: "The administration needs to get rid of the telecommunications systems, and gear more to education criteria, oppose to entertainment criteria."

Students project that UMass has lost an abundance of distinguished and legitimate teachers due to the budget cuts. This is hurting students because classes that once contained a reasonable amount of students, now have increased in size much greater than capacity.

Alfreda Whyte, a zoology major, said her classes are "ridiculous" in size. Being a zoology major, she is required to dissect animals. At times there can be up to three people trying to examine and dissect one subject at the same time. She said she feels to do this properly with three people is almost impossible.

Whyte said not only is it the classes that are affecting her, but financially she is pressured. With the budget cuts, her financial aid is cut, which forces her to work every week as well as tend to her studies.

She said: "This is beginning to get hard for me to handle."

Caecenia Marcelino, a Spanish major at UMass said she feels the administration needs to better manage their money. She said: "The administration is taking crazy money and not doing anything with it."

"So many students have singles [in the residence halls] on this campus, in which they have to pay about a $150. What are they doing with that extra money?" Macelino asked.

Crisis in public education

The American public education system is facing a crisis, and its primary victims are African-Americans, as well as millions of Hispanics and low income people.

Dr. Manning Marable

According to the statistics of the U.S. Department of Education Testing Service, about 20 million American adults are functionally illiterate. Each day, 3,000 American teenagers drop out of school. Only 71 percent of all ninth graders graduate within four years. Thirteen percent of all 16- to 24-year-olds are not currently in school and have not completed high school. One half of all American 17-year-olds cannot perform math problems which are usually taught in junior high school. More than one quarter of all 13-year-olds, cannot successfully complete elementary level arithmetic, and only six percent of 17-year-olds can answer most algebra problems.

Perhaps the greatest deficiency of students is their inability to write and read clearly and with comprehension. According to the recent report of the National Assessment of Educational Progress (NAEP), less than two thirds of all 17-year-olds are able to write an adequate letter of application for a job — "adequate" being defined as the ability to write clearly enough to merit the author a job interview.

Students do even worse when they are asked to write on a topic employing evidence and an argument pro or con. Only 27 percent of the 17-year-olds could do an adequate job when asked to write a letter to their senator discussing whether or not to cut the budget for the space program. And as for the NAEP's highest category of writing, "elaborate writing" — that is, writing which does an excellent job informing or persuading — only a small minority of 17-year-olds were in this category. Only 4 percent for the job letters; only 1 percent for letters to the senator.

The crisis is greatest for Black youth. African-Americans are disproportionally represented among those who are functionally illiterate and who drop out of school. Educators have known that one of the primary predictors of what sociologists call a person's "life chances" is the level of education one receives. More than two thirds of all Black men currently in prison, for example, have an eleventh grade education or less.

The U.S. Center for Education Statistics did a national longitudinal survey of high school sophomores in 1980. The survey tracked the progress of three groups: high school graduates, who graduated with a C or better; "at risk" graduates, who had academic averages below C* but nevertheless finished high school; and non-graduates, students who dropped out. Five years after their sophomore year in high school, it was learned that nine percent of all Black female high school graduates were on welfare and were unwed mothers. A much larger percentage of this group were enrolled in colleges or vocational schools. Nineteen percent of the "at risk" high school Black female graduates were receiving welfare by 1985. For Black female dropouts, 44 percent were on welfare by 1985, and 54 percent were unmarried mothers.

There is a direct correlation between poverty and inferior education. Keep in mind that 57 percent of all Black families headed by 15- to 24-year-olds live in poverty, and the chief breadwinners of such families usually have no high school diplomas. Seventy five percent of all Black poor families are headed by single females.

In recent years, many American politicians and corporate leaders have tried to find a "scapegoat" to explain away the crisis in American public education. There's a long tradition of scapegoating in American politics. When things go wrong, find someone to blame, regardless of the actual evidence. And politicians and even some educators, such as William Bennett, Reagan's former Secretary of Education, have sometimes tried to attribute the crisis to teachers. This scapegoat thesis claims that the federal government is spending more than ever to improve schools, but money isn't the answer. The productivity and performance of teachers has to be improved, which means various merit pay proposals and efforts to mandate more strict statewide teachers exams.

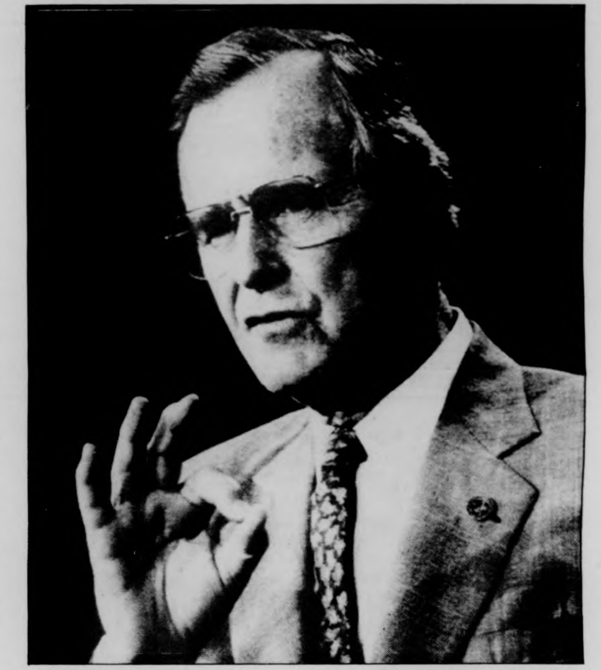
Like all half-truths, such rhetoric sounds plausible enough to seem valid. The "blame the teachers" rhetoric plays wells with those who don't want to increase taxes to pay for academic excellence. But let's examine the evidence, not rhetoric.

Part of the crisis in public education exists because since 1981 the federal government has actually retreated from its historic financial commitments. According to the U.S. Department of Education, federal spending on education between 1980 to 1988, when adjusted for inflation, actually fell 12 percent, 49.3 billion to 43.3 billion. Overall spending for elementary and secondary school programs declined by 19 percent, and federal expenditures for post secondary education plummeted 26 percent in inflation-adjusted dollars.

Why are we losing the battle for quality education? We want to give lip service to excellence, but we are unwilling to pay for it. Since 1980, according to the "Chronicle of Higher Education," contrary to popular belief "the federal role in education spending has always been relatively small. In 1990, of the $353 billion to be spent by the public and private sectors on education, federal expenditures will account for 6 percent of the total, private spending will account for 27 percent, and the balance will come from state and local governments."

Meanwhile, as George Bush parades and postures himself as the so-called "Education President," this winter he sent to Congress a federal budget for 1991 which would cut aid for 300,000 college students, and do next to nothing innovative to address the problems of urban public schools. We will never achieve excellence in the public schools for Black children so long as the federal government refuses to do its fair share.

Dr. Manning Marable is Professor of Political Science and Sociology at the University of Colorado, Boulder.



AP photo

Although President Bush considers himself to be the "Education President," his proposed programs for education in 1991 are not geared towards positive innovation.

Efforts commended

Throughout the duration of my three years here at UMass, every spring I have attended the events held during the "Funk-o-Thon" weekend, (the Malcom X picnic, Greek step show, and of course the "Funk-O-Thon" party).

Maybe that is why I never have given it much thought as to the significant amount of time and effort put into the sponsoring and production of these events.

Dawn Pierce

Well I am proud to say that I have had a recent awakening and I now truly appreciate the efforts made by the student organizations to hold such social events for the Black community on campus. I know everyone always complains on how boring it can get up here at UMass, but ask yourself just how much more tedious this campus atmosphere would be without these social functions (however minor they may be).

My recent exposure to University administrative politics and its effects on RSO groups have made me realize the frustrations many of these groups encounter when trying to resolve conflict with the administration. In particular, I have observed and followed the Black Mass Communications Project (BMCP) and their efforts to improve the conditions surrounding the late night events held here at UMass. In this particular circumstance, the whole process of conflict resolution with the University administration has often been a difficult and repetitive one. Many times it appears to be a viscous cycle of run around responses by the administration to brush off the issues at hand.

Recently, however, members of BMCP have received a long overdue,somewhat clarified, but not yet substantial response to their attempts to reach a compromise with University administration. The problem is not sufficiently resolved as of the present time to the liking of members of BMCP; and it is obvious that although the wheels are turning in the right direction for resolution, there is still a long road to travel in confirming plans to resolve future conflicts. Yet in the midst of all of the chaos surrounding the issue of late night events held on campus, one cannot ignore the endeavors of individuals such as those members of BMCP to reach an compromise with University administration, and any and all other individuals involved.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES(March 21-April 19): A complicated situation straightens itself out. You are able to relax with a special loved one. Children take to your new romantic partner. Do things that will increase their rapport. Romance sizzles.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20): Forgive and forget past grievances. Someone will trust you even more after you fulfill a promise today. An unusual job offer gives you the rare opportunity to try a completely new field.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20): A friend shows true loyalty. Those who try to hide something will be found out. Keep you business dealings strictly aboveboard. Romance benefits from the suspense a phone call creates.

CANCER(June 21-July 22): Not a good time to launch a business venture. Be a bit vague when describing a new product or service. You must be sure of your listener's loyalty before going into details.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22): Do not ignore your intuition just because you do not want to believe it. A disappointment can be turned into a plus! A date could introduce you to the ideal companion.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22): Money from a part-time job makes things easier for the whole family. Monitor youngsters' behavior if you sense they are headed for trouble. You cannot let them ruin their lives. Be firm.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22): A noisy environment saps your energy at a time when you must get things done. Persevere! A financial maneuver buys you the time you need to pay pressing bills. Enjoy socializing tonight.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21): A blowup could prove costly. Keep your temper in check and eventually things will go the way you wish. A positive attitude helps you win the support you need. Soft-pedal any criticism.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21): Unconventional advice helps you locate a job you can do well. Ask yourself some tough questions about a current relationship. Keep track of your expenses when traveling.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19): You can be very impressive in a business meeting. Avoid emotional outbursts. This is not time to gamble with your career. Protect your savings. A teen-ager teaches you a valuable lesson.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18): Take time out to solve a financial problem. You cannot afford to dismiss the possibility that someone is trying to deceive you. Keep in close touch with business contacts at a distance.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20): Make certain your financial affairs are in order. You will not be sorry for taking a chance on someone who has suffered a recent setback. A parent would welcome a visit. Romance is blissful!

Frank Reed released from Lebanon prison

• Free after 42 months

DAMASCUS (AP) — Early yesterday in Washington, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said a hostage reception team was being dispatched to Wiesbaden, West Germany to greet Frank Reed, who was released yesterday after 42 months in captivity in Lebanon.

U.S. officials were in Wiesbaden just last week, debriefing freed U.S hostage Robert Polhill. Polhill was freed April 22 after 39 months in captivity.

Reed's release came a day after kidnappers released two statements promising to free him. One was signed by The Organization of Islamic Dawn.

Shiite Moslem leader Hussein Musawi, who along with Syria and Iran played a key role in Polhill's release, said yesterday he had "not heard of this American hostage or the kidnap group" before Sunday.

"No Islamic organization loyal to Jeruslaem and following Ayatollah Khomeini's line will hand the Americans a new gift after its support of the Jerusalem resolution," he said.

He referred to a non-binding resolution passed by the U.S. House of Representatives last Tuesday endorsing a united Jerusalem as the capital of Israel.

Musawi called the resolution a demonstration of American ill will, and on Wednesday urged kidnappers not to free another American hostage.

Musawi spoke to The Associated Press by telephone from his headquarters in the ancient Roman city of Baalbek in the Syrian-controlled Bakaa Valley of east Lebanon.

He is the reputed mentor of Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine, the Shiite group that kidnapped Polhill and U.S. educators Alann Steen and Jesse Turner in Beirut Jan. 24, 1987. Turner and Steen are still captives.

Iranian state radio, meanwhile, accused Washington of damaging efforts to free the Western hostage remaining in Lebanon by not reciprocating for Polhill's release.

"With regard to Washington's reaction . . . the process of solving the hostage-taking crisis is much slower than was previously expected," Tehran Radio said in a commentary. The dispatch was monitored in Cyprus.

After Polhill's release, Iranian officials and Lebanese Shiite leaders called for the reciprocal releases of Shiite fundamentalists held by Israel and Kuwait. President Bush has said he refuses to deal for the hostages.

The English-language Tehran Times, a newspaper close to Iranian President Hashemi Rafsanjani, quoted an unnamed Iranian official today as saying Reed's captors agreed to free him after "extensive talks" that followed Polhill's release.

Rafsanjani, leader of Iran's so-called pragmatists, is seeking to improve ties with the West after a decade of hostility. He is opposed at home by fundamentalist radicals allied to the Shiite militants in Lebanon.

Reed, 57, director of the Lebanese International School, was kidnapped Sept.9, 1986, near Beirut airport.

The promise to free him was made in two typewritten statements, accompanied by three photographs of the hostage. The messages and photos were delivered to Beirut's independent daily An-Nahar and a Western news agency.

No demands was made for Reed's release. The kidnappers said he would carry a message to the Bush administration.

The first statement was unsigned. The second identified the kidnap factions the Organization of Islamic Dawn. His abduction was earlier claimed by the Organization of Arab Revolutionary Cells-Omar Mukhtar Brigade.

Reed has lived in Beirut since late 1977, before he was kidnapped. He had converted to Islam to marry his second wife, Fahima Dalati, a Syrian Moslem.

He has a son, 9-year-old Tarek with Fahima, and two other children, Jacqueline and Marilyn, from his first marriage. They live in Malden, Massachusetts.

• Reed's wife Fifi to visit him

MALDEN, Mass. (AP) — Fifi Reed prepared to leave for West Germany Monday to meet her husband, Frank, released after 42 months in captivity in Lebanon.

The State Department's telephoned word of her husband's release was greeted with a shout when it came shortly before 2 p.m. at her home, where relatives and a crowd of reporters were gathered awaiting word.

"They have word that Frank is with the Syrians now," she said. "He's been handed over to the Syrians."

"I really hope that he's in good health, that's all I care about now," she said.

Asked if she thought the family might return to the Middle East, she said, "We stay here, no way of going back there."

She also said her husband's release made her hopeful for release of the remaining hostages.

"That's my basic thought of the moment, I want to see everybody happy as I am now," she said.

Mrs. Reed said she expected to travel to Germany to meet her husband. She said her sister in Damascus would try to meet him in the Middle East.

The State Department spokesman had no details on Reed's condition, she said.

"I don't know what I'll tell him" Mrs. Reed said of her possible reunion with her husband.

"I still haven't seen him," she said. "I'll wait to see him before I let go."

"Our reaction is fabulous," said Marilyn Langson, Reed's daughter. "I can't believe it's finally over. It's been a long haul. We're thrilled."

Edward Reed, Reed's brother, said, "It's a great day. I feel wonderful."

Frank Reed has been held hostage for 42 months.

A picture and an unsigned statement were delivered to a newspaper in Lebanon Sunday saying Reed would be freed within 48 hours. The same statement and another picture were also sent to a Western news agency.

Three hours after the anonymous statement was delivered, a previously unknown group calling itself the Organization of Islamic Dawn sent a statement to an independent newspaper in Lebanon along with a black-and-white picture. The group claimed responsibility for the first announcement.

Mrs. Reed said her husband looked much thinner and much older when shown the photograph the kidnappers sent along with the unsigned statement.

The kidnappers did not disclose when the picture was taken. Mrs. Reed said the photograph might be current, since Reed did not have a beard when he was abducted.

She said the another picture released Sunday that showed him clean-shaven was probably old.

A native of Boston's northern suburb of Malden, Reed attended Harvard University, the University of Maine and Northeastern University.

Reed has been described as a personable, outgoing man, who made two trips to Lebanon before leaving his post as school principal in Whitefield, N.H., to become director of elementary education at Beiruts' International college in 1977.

At the time of his abduction on Sept. 9, 1986, Reed was running the private Lebanese International School, which he founded after his former school, the International college, had been bombed out.

After his abduction, a caller to a Western news agency claimed the American was a CIA spy and was taken hostage by Islamic Johad. That Shiite fundamentalist organization denied holding him and other callers claimed responsibility in the name of the Moslem fundamentalist Hezbollah and the little-known Resurrection Cells.

Reed's family called the espionage charge ridiculous.

Grad Students - Vote

If you did not vote in the Graduate Student Senate Elections do so today in the Campus Center. For Vice President's post my views on various issues are: (1) Fight fee increases but not through student strikes called without vote. (2) Vice-President should cooperate with GEO but not be a member of GEO because of potential conflict of interests. (3) DOD funding - No questions should be asked as it supports a large number of graduate assistants. (4) GSS money - should be allocated without political considerations.

Milbury leading Bruins to the Cup

GEORGE AUSTIN

It is funny how fast things seem to change over time. I remember going over to my grandfather's every Sunday night when I was a kid, about 12 years old. If it was fall or winter it usually meant one thing — watching the Bruins game.

Peter McNab, Rick Middleton, Gerry Cheevers, Giles Gilbert, Jean Ratelle. Those were the names to watch in that day. They put up the big numbers.

Then there was a guy named Mike Milbury, a defenseman, who averaged somewhere around four goals a year. Milbury was never a flashy player. He was just one of those players who came to the rink and did his job every night. But oh, how my grandfather hated him.

"That Milbury stinks," he must have told me a million times. "You watch. Every time he's on the ice, the other team scores. You watch."

Now we're not talking about any fair weather fan here. My grandfather does not, I repeat, does not miss a Bruins game unless something very big comes up. He has been watching for decades from his couch on his big color TV in the living room.

He knows as much about hockey as just about anyone. So when Guy Lafleur or Guy Lapointe of the dreaded Canadians (back when the Bruins just couldn't beat the Habs) scored a goal and Milbury was on the ice, he'd just shake his head and punch the couch. He hated to see the Bruins lose, especially to the Canadians. That couch has taken quite a beating over the years.

Milbury, despite his low totals, was able to stick around for more than a decade.

The Bruins have been so close to another Stanley Cup so many times since the last time they won it in 1972. Something always seems to happen in the playoffs though. Too many men on the ice, blackouts, seventh games. It's always something.

Milbury has been there so many times.

This time however, everything seems different. The Bruins have to be the odds on favorite of the teams left in the playoffs to win the Cup. And the biggest reason for that is Milbury.

He guided Boston to the best record in the National Hockey League this year in the regular season and has brought them through the first two rounds of the playoffs. The Washington Capitals and the winner of the Campbell Conference (Edmonton, St. Louis or Chicago) are all that stands in the Bruins way now.

What has gotten the Bruins to this point has been the kind of hockey that the Bruins used to play back in Milbury's prime playing days. It is the work ethic, the hustle, the forechecking that we used to see so much of that has the Bruins almost at the top of the hill.

Milbury has been the one making sure that the mental toughness is there every night. When it hasn't, there has been tough practices, players have sat out games or on the bench when there effort just did not cut it. Losing hasn't been unacceptable but a lack of effort has been.

Milbury hasn't been on the ice once when the other team has scored a goal. And my grandfather's couch is nice and comfy today.

UM lax leaves BC out in the rain

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

CHESTNUT HILL – Some things never change when the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team plays Boston College.

It seems the game will always be played on the Eagles home turf, it will always be raining and lately the Eagles will give UMass a tougher time than expected.

Boston College kept things tense for three quarters until the Gorillas pulled away for a 20-13 win last night at Alumni Stadium.

Junior attack Jim McAleavey paced the Gorillas with three goals and eight assists while four other players each scored two goals.

UMass jumped out to quick lead as senior attack Scott Hiller scored a pair of goals and Rich Senatore and Jamie Bergan each got one to give UMass a 4-1 lead. It was 4-2 after one quarter before the Gorillas started to open things.

Mark Millon scored at 1:47 of the second quarter before Mark Gaffney got his third of six goals for Boston College. UMass then ran off four straight goals to make it 9-3 and a rout was in the making as UMass held an 11-5 lead at the half.

But Boston College would have none of that. Whatever coach Ed Moy told his team during the intermission certainly worked as the Eagles stormed the UMass defense for five straight goals to start the second half. A goal by John Larkin just 5:10 into the third quarter had the Gorillas reeling and Boston College right back in the game at 11-10.

But the Eagles would never draw even again. Tim Soudan broke the run with a goal at 7:22. Gaffney brought it back to one again for Boston College before goals by Frank Pepe and Bergan pushed the UMass lead to 14-11 after three quarters.

From there UMass just gradually pulled away. Consecutive goals by McAleavey in the first three minutes of the final quarter gave the Gorillas a 16-11 lead and the remaining time was spent fighting the raindrops.

Three players split the goaltending chores. Junior Ted Kellerman started and made seven saves in his one quarter of play. Sophomore Ray Suris had 11 saves while freshman Todd Ackerman mopped up.

The win was the 299th in the career of UMass coach Dick Garber. UMass will try to get the milestone 300th win for Garber tomorrow night when it travels to Brown University for a 6 p.m. start. The Gorillas close the regular season at Syracuse.

UMass men's lacrosse team gets by Boston College in a 20-13 victory, marking the 299th win for Coach Dick Garber.

The Gorillas look to be making their upward move just at the right time.

With the NCAA only able to pick 11 teams for the postseason dance (a team from the West automatically gets the 12th and final bid), UMass had to do some serious work to thrust itself into the picture.

The latest U.S. Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association poll had UMass at 11th, though it has no bearing on the postseason because the NCAA does its own seedings for the tournament.

The Gorillas moved up from 14th last week to their highest plateau of the season. Having beaten Rutgers (which was 12th) helped, but other factors probably included losses by Maryland (to North Carolina in the ACC tournament) and Navy (to Johns Hopkins – remember them?).

Also, even though UMass lost to Harvard last Wednesday, that game was glorified significantly when the Crimson beat previously-undefeated Yale, 8-7 in double overtime Saturday: Harvard moved up to third.

Meanwhile, for UMass to boost its stock even more, it must win either tomorrow at Brown (ranked fourth) or Sunday at Syracuse (No. 1 – in case there was ever any question).

A check of the latest USILA stats shows that UMass players are finally listed among the statistical leaders.

Jim McAleavey was second in both assists per game (37 in 9 games – an average of 4.11) and points per game (60 in 9 – 6.67), while Rob Codignotto was 10th in goals (33 in 9 – 3.67).

Codignotto scored his 100th career point with his goal in the first quarter against Rutgers. Soudan needed two points entering last night to reach the same milestone.

Today's ballgame in Maine should be a hit

UMass to play hot hitting Black Bears

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

If you like to watch good hitting, Portland, Me. is the place to be. The University of Massachusetts baseball team faces the University of Maine tonight (5 p.m.) for two games.

The Minutemen are stroking the ball to the tune of .304, while the Black Bears are hitting a lofty .339.

Andy Hartung leads the Maine attack which has terrorized pitchers all season with a .432 average. Hartung leads the team with nine homeruns and 58 RBIs. Mark Sweeney and Gary Taylor each have eight dingers.

The University of Massachusetts baseball team hitting .304 as a team will take on another team of sluggers today as they play Maine (.339).

As a team, Maine has scored 10 or more runs 15 times this season in 44 games. The team record is 30-14, and in the North Atlantic Conference, the Black Bears are 10-2 fresh off of a three game series with Hartford, which they won two.

Maine began their season in Hawaii, compiling a 6-7 record before coming home and winning 16 straight.

The Black Bears have assumed the number one ranking in New England. A ranking which they have earned by defeating the likes of number two ranked Central Connecticut, number three ranked Providence, and other New England schools such as Rhode Island, New Hampshire, Vermont, Connecticut, Hartford, Boston College, Colby, and the infamous Husson (it's in Maine). Against New England schools, the Black Bears are a combined 19-2, the losses coming against Hartford and Central Connecticut.

Maine is a team loaded with pitching, Mike D'Andrea is 8-3 with a 3.20 ERA. Jim Dillon is 6-1, and Larry Thomas is 4-0. Maine has a team ERA of 4.26, but how good do the ERAs really need to be, the hitting makes up for any poor pitching. In fact, Maine has outscored opponents 347-202. The Black Bears are averaging close to eight runs per outing.

As for the Minutemen, the remainder of the regular season is meaningless in terms of the standings. The Minutemen clinched a spot in the A-10 tournament playoffs by defeating Temple four times this past weekend. The problem remains that there are five games left to be played before the playoffs, five games which the Minutemen would like to win in order that they go into the playoffs with a winning frame of mind.

Stone is not worried about motivating his team. "If you can't get motivated to play Maine, [then] you're comatose." "As for Amherst, it's the same thing as Springfield, it's the World Series and the Super Bowl all rolled into one," Stone said. "Northeastern has played well this year, and I'm confident that we'll play hard against them."

Right now, the Minutemen are blessed with hitting, the top eight batters in the starting lineup are batting over .300. Only Dan Biagini is below .300. Biagini's contribution comes in the field, where the second baseman has turned 21 double plays.

In game one, Darryle Corriveau faces Maine, and in game two, the Minutemen are undecided. One thing is certain, this will not be a pitcher's duel. Scorekeepers sharpen your pencils, this game should be a shootout.

"When we hit in bunches, we score a lot of runs," Stone said. "[Our kids are] real good competitors, they won three games this weekend by coming back. They don't like to lose."

FIELD NOTES: Apologies to, Mike Stone for the mistake that was made regarding the number of players who quit the team last year. Only three players quit, two were dismissed equaling five not seven as was reported.

INJURY UPDATE: The news is not good for UMass, Jerry Creamer has an elbow injury and according to Stone, he will not pitch for a while.

John Russell pinched his elbow in the dugout over the weekend and was unable to pitch. Russell could be the pitcher in game two today if he feels better.

Lou Olivieri twisted his knee and will not play for a week.

Dan O'Leary has a nerve injury in his back, his status is day-to-day.

The game between UMass and Central Connecticut scheduled for this weekend has been canceled so that CCSU can make up a conference game.

Remember the game that St. Joseph's protested because the baseballs were not official A-10 balls, that protest has been disallowed.

UM students on living in NOHO: social life, diversity worth commute

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff

Every year, many students at the University of Massachusetts pack up their belongings and leave campus dormitories and Amherst houses and apartments behind to live the life of the Northampton commuter.

What is it about Northampton that lures UMass students away from Amherst?

According to several students, the distance between Northampton and Amherst provides a unique environment that is a welcome change from the social life, attitudes, and people in Amherst and in the University dormitories.

> "There seems to be more of a 'college jock' mentality in Amherst. Northampton seems to be more tolerant of alternate life styles." – Frank Daniels, UMass sophomore

Frank Daniels, a UMass sophomore and a double major in theater and studio art, said he has lived in Northampton for the past five years. While he has never lived in Amherst, Daniels said Amherst seems to be more 'collegy' than Northampton.

"There seems to be more of a 'college jock' mentality in Amherst," Daniels said. "Northampton seems to be more tolerant of alternate life styles."

Wendy Noah, who graduated from UMass with a bachelor's degree in communications in February of 1990, and has been living in Northampton since September of 1989, said she "loves" Northampton.

"It was such a pleasure to spend senior year not in a college town," Noah said. "There's more culture [in Northampton], and more interesting people, with a variety of backgrounds and interests."

Bryan Wood, a senior sociology major at UMass, said he agrees that Northampton is comprised of a more diverse group of people.

"In Northampton, there is a more eclectic crowd," Wood said. "It's boring in Amherst, because there are a lot of the same types of people."

Daniel Hartling, a UMass sophomore English major who has lived in Northampton since the spring of 1989, said he thinks Amherst is a "phony" town.

"Northampton is a college town, but there are also real people — there are real bums on the street, and people of color who not only go to school but are residents there as well," he said.

"Northampton has a nice atmosphere that I don't see in Amherst," Hartling added. "There's too much hustle and bustle in Amherst."

However, several students said they do like the 'hustle and bustle,' which they said also exists in Northampton.

A sophomore women's studies major, who wanted to have her name withheld, said she enjoys being able to walk to a number of restaurants, clubs, and bars.

"It's good for not having a car, or if you don't want to drive drunk," she said.

As far as commuting to UMass, several students said they are not inconvenienced by the distance between Northampton and Amherst.

Rebecca Zawalich, a UMass senior computer engineering major, said: "I do have a car, but I usually take the bus. The bus works out fine, because it comes pretty often."

Beth Tallon, a UMass sophomore anthropology major, said she likes the distance "because it makes it easier to blow off class when you don't feel like going."

1,700 rally for choice at Boston Common

Weld, Bellotti, Murphy speak — with different reactions

By LAVINIA GAMMON
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — More than 1,700 students from 20 colleges and 10 high schools statewide rallied in the Massachusetts Walkout for Choice yesterday on the Boston Common.

Brandeis University student Susan Resnick, the official rally counter, said there was a good turnout from the University of Massachusetts-Amherst and the entire Amherst area.

"We are here today because we have to be," said rally organizer Amy Rutkin, a sophomore at Brandeis.

"The students in Massachusetts have to come out in numbers at rallies, in letter writing campaigns, and in the polls. A strong student voting block is essential to put in pro-choice governors and legislators to ensure reproductive and sexual freedom for all women," she said.

Yesterday's rally commemorated the first National Student Strike in protest of former President Richard Nixon's invasion of Cambodia. The strike, which began May 1, 1970, at Brandeis, spread throughout the country during the month of May.

Speakers at yesterday's rally included Massachusetts gubernatorial candidates, former U.S. Attorney William Weld, a Republican, and the Democratic Lt. Governor Evelyn Murphy.

Democratic gubernatorial candidate Francis X. Bellotti, the former Attorney General, was scheduled to speak, but withdrew 12 hours prior to the rally.

Rutkin said Bellotti disagreed with a rally demand that said all women have complete control over their bodies throughout their entire pregnancy, including third-trimester abortions.

Murphy addressed the issue of a woman's right to privacy, saying it is in "serious jeapordy." She said people must fight to ensure this right is protected.

"This is a state that is going to fight for a woman's right to choose," said Murphy to a cheering crowd.

Weld, who only recently joined the pro-choice movement, spoke about the importance of next fall's elections.

The crowd applauded when he said, "The next governor of Massachusetts must be pro-choice!"

Other speakers at the rally addressed several issues, including state-funded abortion, a minor's right to get abortion without parental consent, and safer forms of birth control.

A petition to legalize the French abortion pill RU486 was passed among ralliers during the event.

Student's voting power was one of the major themes at the rally. A voter registration booth was set up and 88 students registered to vote by the end of the day.

"We must register to vote! The power is in our hands and we must use it to protect our reproductive rights," said Swati Joshi, a spokesperson for the UMass Progressive Organization for Women's Rights.

Hampshire College student Vallerie Gintis gained entrance to the press area by using a borrowed press badge. She then verbally attacked Weld, who at the time was conducting interviews with several college reporters. Weld declined to comment at that time.

Gintis questioned Weld's sincerity toward the pro-choice movement.

"I really wanted to question how the Republicans can support pro-choice while still cutting health care, welfare, education, abortion counseling, rape services . . . You name it," Gintis said after the incident.

UM student allegedly raped near stadium

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

A 19-year-old female University of Massachusetts student was allegedly raped during the early morning hours of April 28, shortly after a campuswide rally dedicated to women's right to walk alone at night unharrassed and unmolested.

A report released from the Department of Public Health and Safety yesterday states the woman had parked her car in Lot 22, located between the Southwest Residential Area and Warren G. McGuirk Alumni Stadium. The woman was getting out of her car when she was grabbed from behind and pulled into a full-sized, four-door, dark-colored motor vehicle.

The vehicle then drove a short distance and stopped, where one assailant then allegedly raped the woman. The vehicle apparently proceeded slowly by the Dallas Mall, in front of the stadium, where the victim was then pushed out of the vehicle.

The woman was treated at University Health Services and released. The investigation is being handled through Community Disorders.

Friday's rally, "Take Back The Night," was devoted to women's empowerment. Rally organizers said the purpose of the demonstration was to create awareness of everyday violence against women.

Melissa Casumbas, an Amherst College political science and women's studies major, spoke at the rally Friday. She said she found it disgusting that the rape would follow an evening devoted to spreading knowledge about the abuse of women.

"It's devastating and amazingly frustrating. It just points to the breadth and depth of the problem. This is incredibly infuriating," Casumbas said.

Adrienne Fleming, a UMass student and rally organizer, said: "It's absolutely shocking. After that march, we now are forced to realize it was only symbolic."

Duffey condemned for not selling Israeli bonds

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Asserting Israel is an apartheid state, several students leading an effort to "clarify" the University of Massachusetts' investment policy condemned Chancellor/President Duffey's refusal Monday to sell Israeli government bonds owned by the University.

"Basically, our response is one of outrage," said Rachel Maiore, a UMass senior majoring in Social Thought and Political Economy. "Especially at the chancellor."

Duffey rejected students' demands that UMass-owned Israeli government bonds be sold. He said comparisons between Israel and South Africa are "improper, offensive and inaccurate."

Maiore said Israel is an apartheid state because Palestinians living in Israel are treated as second-class citizens.

"[Duffey] has come out with a statement making a declaration that isn't his to make," Maiore said, asserting that the UMass board of trustees should make the decision because they approved the investment policy.

The issue of whether Israel is indeed an apartheid state has sparked much debate on campus, prompting students to hold rallies and alert campus administrators of their opposing stances. On Monday, pro-Israel students marched to the Whitmore Administration building to protest "anti-Israel" views on campus.

Randi Dubno, president of the UMass Hillel Foundation, the main Jewish student organization on campus, called attempts to link Israel to South Africa absurd.

"It's important to understand that as Jews we are deeply concerned about apartheid," she said. "It is wrong and unjust."

Out-of-state students sue Regents, 27 college heads

By DAVID R. MARK
Collegian Staff

Claiming a tuition increase earlier this year for non-resident students was a breach of contract, attorney Carl Valvo has filed a class action suit in U.S. District Court in Boston against the Board of Regents of Higher Education and the governing bodies of the state's 27 public colleges and universities.

Valvo, an attorney from the Boston firm Cosgrove, Eisenberg and Kiley, said the $485 increase also violates the privileges and immunities clause of the U.S. Constitution, a clause that prohibits states from discriminating against citizens of other states. The tuition increase was passed after students had begun their spring semester.

Valvo, a former assistant attorney general in Boston, said he began the suit, filed April 17, when he was contacted by Terri Arriaga, a California resident attending Massachusetts Bay Community College.

"She did not like the bill she had gotten and thought it was unfair and illegal," he said.

Valvo, looking for additional plaintiffs, then sent letters to several dozen out-of-state students at the colleges throughout Massachusetts. He also sent letters to people who had registered complaints with their colleges or the regents, or who had signed petitions. About 20 students have already responded to Valvo's letter and said they would be active participants in the case. He said he expects more students will soon respond.

Steven Williams, a UMass junior psychology major from Miami, said he was surprised when he received the letter because he didn't feel anybody but other students were on the side of non-resident students.

Survey coordinator says campus lighting is good

But some areas of UMass still need help

By JOSEPH M. MONTAGNA
Collegian Correspondent

Results of the first lighting survey in 10 years show that while most areas on campus are safely lit at night, some areas need improvement, said Donald Robinson, coordinator of the survey.

The survey, conducted by the Department of Environmental Health and Safety, shows that general high traffic areas, such as between the library and the campus center, meet required standards, Robinson said.

However, he said that Fraternity/Sorority park remains a high priority for improvement and other areas on Stockbridge Road and Orchard Hill also do not meet requirements.

Robinson said lighting on the campus has improved since the last survey.

"I would say that the lighting has gone from fair to good over the past 10 years but we are striving for excellence," Robinson said.

The survey has been conducted over the course of the semester and involves the use of a light meter to detect the light levels on the seven miles of walkways and paths on campus. Light level readings are then compared to standard readings which are considered to be safe for certain areas, said Robinson.

The standard light level on walkways should register equal to that of one foot of candle light, he said.

Needed improvements, such as spotlighting and changing light bulbs, will be done over the summer, he said.

> "I would say that the lighting has gone from fair to good over the past 10 years but we are striving for excellence" - Donald Robinson, survey coordinator.

Major changes will take longer because equipment and funding from the state is not forthcoming, said Robinson, who added it might be necessary to lease lighting from utilities. William Weitzer, assistant to the Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, said the illumination of the campus at night has been an issue for some time. He said the results from the survey will be beneficial.

"I think it's good idea to shed some light on lighting," he said.

IN BETWEEN THE SHADOWS — Do I look familiar?

Students to join worldwide 'joy' of Israeli independence

As part of celebration, Hillel to sell 1,000 trees

By JULIA SEREBRINKSY
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Hillel Foundation will spend this Thursday commemorating the 42nd anniversary of Israel's Independence with a food jubilee, folkdancing, and a performance by the Hillel choir Zamarim. The festivities will take place in the Student Union Ballroom from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m.

An important addition to this year's celebration is the inaguration of "Rooted in Peace," a Hillel program aimed at selling trees in Israel, said Hillel director Yehudit Heller.

Heller said the program is being undertaken to partially ameliorate Israel's loss of forests in Jerusalem and Carmel Mountain after recent tree burnings by Palestinians.

According to Biblical tradition, the growth of a tree is analogous to human life, and for many centuries the Jewish people have planted trees in Israel, Heller said.

"Trees are life, and that's what people are about," she said. "What is a better thing to do than to show love by planting trees."

During the Independence Day celebration, trees will be sold for $5. Heller said Hillel has set a goal of selling 1,000 trees.

In addition to selling trees, the celebration will symbolize good will and human connection with a long mural, Heller said. The mural is a wall painting on which any person can write his or hopes or anything else, she said.

Heller said the Hillel celebration of independence will be carried out in the same spirit as the celebration in Israel, where people will eat, sing and dance on the streets.

Heller said the independence day is "a way for people to get together and say that they are happy."

She added that this particular date has a more universal significance.

"The fact that there is Israel is important for the world as well as the Jews," she said. "The fact that it was created is a wonderful thing."

Senate to debate RSO funding

Republicans charge SGA decision is biased against right

By RUSSELL SKELTON
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate begins debate tonight on the Student Government Association budget for fiscal year 1991, in which proposed funding for more than 75 percent of all Registered Student Organizations has been increased from last year.

Originally, only 11 of 33 RSOs were slated to get more money, but the SGA passed two motions last week that substantially cut funding for area governments and the Campus Center Board of Governors. As a result, 14 other RSOs were given new consideration.

The Boltwood Project, an RSO consisting of students helping mentally handicapped residents of the Belchertown State School, is one of several groups that may have its SGA funding increased by almost 100 percent.

Amy Knowles, project president, said the $1,694 proposed increase was welcome because it restored the group's funding to its 1989 level after a 50 percent cut in 1990.

Another RSO scheduled to receive an over 100 percent increase is the Lesbian Bisexual Gay Alliance.

LBGA Treasurer Tim Duffy said the $4,105 was needed for providing alternative entertainment, coffee socials and running Awareness Week. He added while the money was helpful "it still isn't enough."

The Union Video Center is a third RSO slated for an increase larger than 100 percent.

UVC President Emil Williams explained the large increase was needed primarily to strenghten a capital equipment depreciation budget and to support the campus-wide telecommunications network scheduled to become operable in the fall.

UVC Staff Advisor Lorelle Paul emphasized the funding increase still puts the UVC well below the budget level for many other low budget local cable television outfits.

The RSO potentially hit with the largest percentage budget decline, 49 percent, is the Republican Club.

Jim Black, club president, said, "There's a bias on the SGA Budgets Committee. It is obvious and unfair."

"The Republican Club is one of the few groups on campus on the right of the political spectrum," Black said. "Regardless of that, RSO funds should be allocated fairly. Political prejudice shouldn't have anything to do with it."

SGA Treasurer Karen Talbot said this sort of sentiment was unfounded.

"Budget decisions are made for purely financial reasons," she said. "The mission of the RSO is not taken into consideration."

Talbot said criteria evaluated when RSO funding levels were considered included amount of self-generated revenue, prior spending, number of students serviced by the organization, and programming requirements.

18 editors, managers elected for fall term

Collegian Staff Reports

Meredith O'Brien was elected yesterday to serve as editor in chief of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian starting next semester, as the Collegian enters its 100th year serving the University of Massachusetts and surrounding communities.

O'Brien, a junior journalism/political science major, has worked at the Collegian for two years, previously serving as editorial editor, and most recently, associate managing editor and associate news editor. O'Brien ran unopposed for the position.

The remaining election results are as follows:

Managing editor will be Sarah Demaster, a junior majoring in journalism and English. She is currently co-features editor.

News editor will be Chris Muther, a junior journalism major who currently is serving as Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Issues editor. Taking over for Muther is Ali Woolwich, a sophomore BDIC major who currently is a staff member in both news and graphics.

Current Women's Issues editor Amy Henry, a junior women's studies major will join outgoing Editorial editor Minu Sebastian, a junior communications major, as co-Women's Issues editors.

Gayle Long and A. Regina Santiago, the current associate editorial editors, will serve as editors of the Editorial page.

Adrienne Matt, a junior journalism major and Sam Silverstein, a junior English major on exchange at the African Commentary magazine:

International journal has Amherst as its home base

By MICHAEL WESTER
Collegian Staff

One look at the size and scope of African Commentary magazine and you are likely to envision a gigantic editorial office scurrying with hundreds of employees. But in reality, a modest-sized office tucked away on Pray Street in Amherst produces this internationally-distributed monthly magazine.

The journal, with distribution across Africa, the United States, Britain, and copies scattered through Europe, Japan and the Caribbean, is edited, designed, and compiled all within Amherst. In the office on Pray Street, five full-time employees and four part-timers keep things running smoothly.

The magazine was concieved by two individuals: visiting University of Massachusetts professor Chinua Achebe and UMass professor of Industrial Engineering Dr. Bartholomew Nnaji. Three years ago, they began thinking of a journal that would appeal to the entire Black world, not only in Africa but in every other land in which people of African descent live.

The editor of the African Commentary, Okey Ndibe, was contacted by the two men in October, 1988, to edit the new journal. Achebe had met with Ndibe several times prior to calling, and knew of his experience as a journalist.

At the time, the 30-year-old Nigerian worked for a weekly news magazine African Guardian out of Lagos, Nigeria.

For Ndibe, it was an offer he could not refuse. It was like a dream come true. His favorite author was inviting him to come to the United States to edit a journal that would break new ground.

Ndibe spoke from his office, cramped by hundreds and hundreds of letters to the editor on his desk, on his floor, everywhere.

"Part of the aim of the magazine is to start a new sense of conectedness between Africans on the continent of Africa and the diaspora," Ndibe said. "We are deliberately expanding the view of the Black world."

"Before we came out, there had been a lot of magazines reporting on Africa and African-American issues, but this is the first attempt I know of to link the African, African-American, and Caribbean, to go wherever in the world there are people of African ancestry," he said.

Although the magazine has mostly readers of African descent, a considerable number of our readers are white, Asian, and cross-cultural, Ndibe said.

Each issue of the magazine includes opinion and analysis of worldwide affairs that affect people of African descent. It also contains articles on cultural topics such as profiles, music, book reviews, humor, sports and poetry.

With its sixth issue hitting the newsstand yesterday, African Commentary has already been recognized as outstanding in its field. It was chosen as one of the 16 best new magazines of 1989 by the Library Journal, a publications industry trade magazine. The Utne Reader, a journal of the independent press, nominated African Commentary for best news feature magazine of 1989 in its Alternative Press Awards.

The magazine has gained attention from other major media outlets, such as USA Today, Harper's and the Detroit Free Press.

Ndibe arrived to help start the magazine in December, 1988. "I took the job because of the challenge, and to be a part of history," he said.

Ndibe's experience includes a degree in business management from the Institute of Mangement and Technology, an eastern Nigerian university. After his graduation, Ndibe worked at the largest newspaper in Nigeria, the National Concord. Later he went on to become part-founder and national editor of African Concord, a pan-African magazine.

Arriving in the United States for the first time, Ndibe had to adjust to the size of Amherst and to misconceptions and streotypes of Africa and Africans.

"Amherst was a new kind of experience for me," he said. "I found it easy to know everyone, and be known by everyone. Amherst has shown me the beauties of a small town."

But beautiful or not, Ndibe had to deal with the unpleasant task of dealing with Americans who were ignorant about his culture.

Okey Ndibe, the editor of African Commentary in his office on Pray street.

In one incident, a student at UMass questioned Ndibe about how he got to the United States. "A graduate student in Engineering who I had been talking to asked me how I got to the United States, because there were no airports in Africa," he said. "I thought he was just joking, so I went along with it and told him that I rode over on the back of a crocodile. He said, 'You mean the crocodile didn't eat you?'

"Two days later, he called me and told me his friends didn't believe him, and would I come over to convince his friends that I was telling the truth," he said.

"There are a lot of Americans who believe that Africa is one single country," he said. "[People think] that Africans see electricity and cars for the first time in the United States; that Africans live on tops of trees, with monkeys. I never saw anybody dancing nude in Africa until I came here and saw it on TV. People see Africa as a dark place with no modern development."

Additionally, the welcome he got from some local law enforcement agents wasn't so pleasant.

"Eleven days after I arrived in Amherst, I was arrested by the police — bank robbery," he said. "After I read a police report, I forgave the police, because the suspect fit my description — average height, Black, roughly the same age."

"But it was kind of a rude awakening," he said.

Ndibe misses his home, but will definitely stay for at least the next two years, as he has a contract with the magazine.

"I really miss my country. I really don't know what I will do. Since I am a founding editor, I have a love affair with this magazine, but I also have a love affair with my country, with my family."

Ndibe said that Amherst is a perfect place to run the magazine. "Here we have the resource of some of the best Black minds in the world," he said. "We fluttered with the idea of going to New York, but we wanted to have a low budget with the highest quality."

In Amherst the magazine can be run cheaper than in New York, which is important considering the size of their budget. "The budget has been unbelievably low. We barter with some couriers. We carry their adverts, and they take our magazine to Europe and Africa.

"When we first started out, we were not taken seriously by national distributors — they looked at our budget and decided we didn't have enough money.

"Here the major problem is trying to get noticed," Ndibe said. "People dismiss you after they ask what your budget is like. You can't do things the old-fashioned way anymore, by dreaming."

Ndibe said that the first issue was paid for by contributions from members of the board, and people who bought shares of the stock.

"Because our expenses are not that high, we should be breaking even soon," he said. "I'm sure I might be one of the lowest paid editors in the United States. But, I don't do it for the money."

Although the magazine publishes only in English, Ndibe says that eventually it will be published in African languages such as Swahili and Ebo, as well as European languages.

African Commentary can provide the other side of Africa — the side that is more than wars, drought and natural disaster.

"The Western press tend to ignore news from Africa," he said. "For instance, many people heard about the Chinese students getting killed last June, but when Nigerian students were killed, it didn't fit the news schedule of the New York Times."

Achebe, the founder and publisher of the magazine, is the author of several books, including Things Fall Apart, Arrow of God, and Man of the People. His books have been translated into 52 different languages.

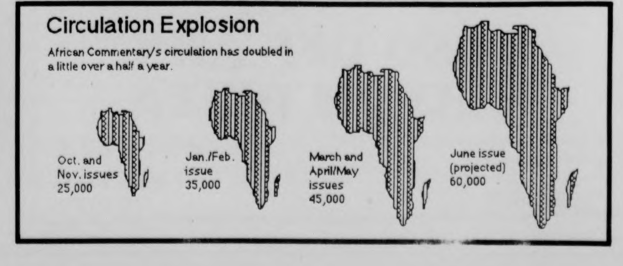
African Commentary's format is that of an "issues magazine," rather than hard news. Among its contributors are Ali Masury, one of the most prominent political scientists of Africa, novelist Toni Morrison.

Several UMass professors including Michael Thelwell, John Bracey, and David DuBois also write for the publication.

So far, response to the magazine has been overwhelmingly supportive, according to Ndibe, but there have been some negative reponses.

"Some people say that his magazine appeals to Black people, and Black people don't read magazines," he said. "Or, that readers don't want to read what Africans have to say."

"I feel happy when people tell me of problems [they have], because then I can think about it and change them," Ndibe said. "It's been a very breathtaking experience for everyone involved."



Circulation Explosion

African Commentary's circulation has doubled in a little over a half a year.

■ Duffey condemned

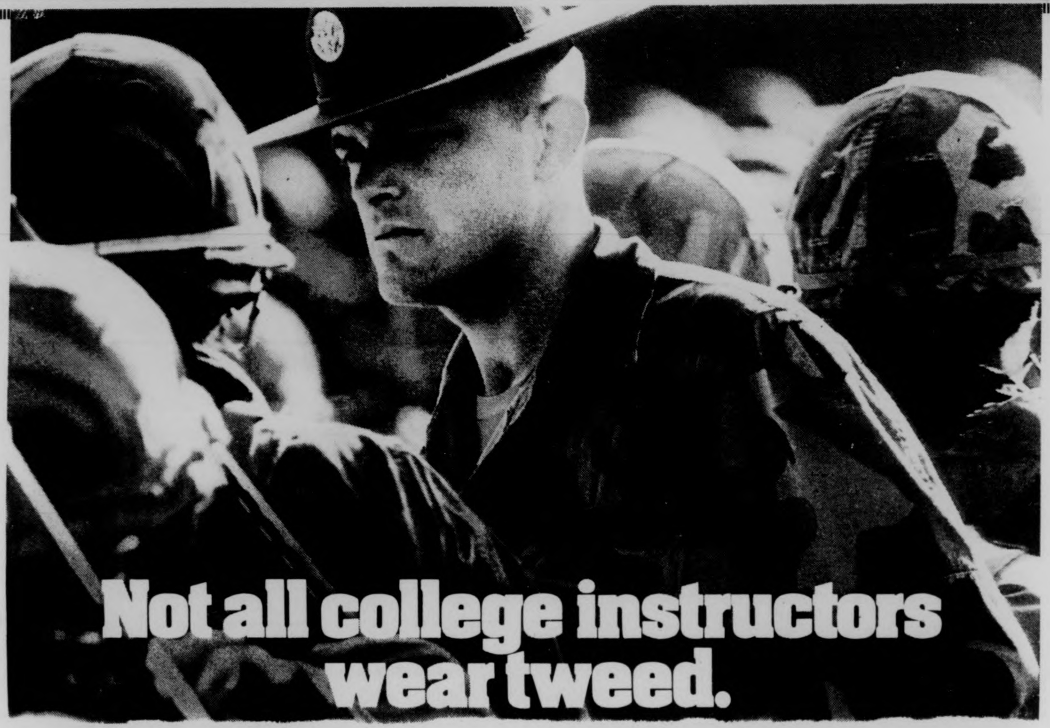
Dubno said all Jewish and non-Jewish Israeli citizens are allowed to vote, run for office and receive health care, regardless of race or ethnicity. She said the stumbling block between Palestinian-Israeli relations is that "[Palestinians] don't want citizenship, they want Israel."

"By linking the two [Israel and South Africa] together it detracts from the real problems in South Africa and exploits the racial discrimination that is occurring in South Africa," she said.

The issue came to the forefront last month when students revealed violations in the UMass policy to disinvest from South Africa. The policy prohibits investments in an apartheid state.

Several UMass administrators said two weeks ago that they will help the students prepare a brief to present to Chancellor Duffey stating their assertion that Israel is an apartheid state.



Not all college instructors wear tweed.

The men and women of the Army National Guard would like to give you an education.

Lesson One: Economics. College isn't cheap.

Lesson Two: Finance. But by serving in the Army National Guard you can qualify for the Montgomery GI Bill–and earn up to $18,000 towards college. By serving as little as one weekend a month and two weeks a year, you can just about cover your tuition.

Lesson Three: Psychology. The Guard will also teach you things about yourself you never knew. You'll gain self-confidence. You'll find out what you're made of. And just how much more you're capable of doing.

Lesson Four: Philosophy. Whether you're operating a tank or assisting in an operating room, you'll be part of making America a stronger nation.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Time to stop the cover-up

The labels "nationalist" and "patriotic" beg a very serious question. As one who loves a nation and its people, do I defend even the most heinous acts on the part of the government, refusing to dissent? Or, do I raise my voice in dissent in hope of creating positive change, in hopes of working towards an even better nation?

Jeremy Levinson

Clearly these two positions are opposed.

A full page advertisement in the Collegian, sponsored by "Hillel and Friends," voices the former position. "We are appalled," it stated, "by the comparison of the State of Israel and the Republic of South Africa." The ad went on to list progressive aspects of Israeli national life and history.

The disappointing side of this pronouncement was in its refusal to deal with the less palatable sides of the Israeli situation. Israel is done no service by misrepresentation.

In addition, the ad is insulting to the community in that it simply ignores very timely and distressing Israeli issues.

Few deny the many exciting and humanitarian endeavors taking place in Israel — and they should be discussed. However, one cannot balance ugly deeds with examples of good ones.

If "Hillel and Friends" wanted to form a just picture of Israel, they were obliged to discuss less savory issues. The technological and trade links between Israel and South Africa are undeniable and shameful. While the Likud government of Israel lied, it traded with South Africa for nuclear weapon technology.

In addition, Israel supplies most of the worlds right-wing terror groups with cutting edge weaponry. We condemn the Contras in Nicaragua and UNITA in Angola but cannot find it in ourselves to protest when Israel sends them Uzi after Uzi?

If we forget that the most despotic Latin American governments keep themselves in power with Israeli weaponry, we drown out the voices of millions living under brutal oppression.

Moreover, it is self-evident that "Hillel and Friends" had trouble rationalizing the disgusting treatment of Palestinians by the Israeli government.

Instead of contriving an excuse for the military occupation of Palestine, they simply ignored the issue in their ostensibly "educational" ad.

To neglect the disparities in treatment of different classes of Jews as well as non-Jews is to make the same excuses for Israel as bigots did and do for the United States.

The comparison between Israel and South Africa is unfortunate but fairly accurate.

I will not go point for point here, but a small example would be the identification denoting ethnicity that South Africans, Israelis and Palestinians must carry or the detentions without charge . . . or the lack of any due process.

I do not want to get involved in an "Israel good/Israel bad" argument. If we refuse to see the problems and inhumanities of Israel's current policies, we do no one any service. Few deny that Israel has much to offer its citizens and the world.

However, as a general rule, one who loves a nation and its people must be critical — that is how societies develop.

If "Hillel and Friends" are truly concerned about Israel they must stop covering up and ignoring the Israeli governments transgressions.

They must join those patriots who stood for equal rights in the United States; clearly their stark criticism was in the "national interest."

The choice is clear: honest criticism towards a more just nation, or lies and deception in a vain effort to obscure the misdeeds of a brutal government.

The Editorial Desk would like to clarify its policies.

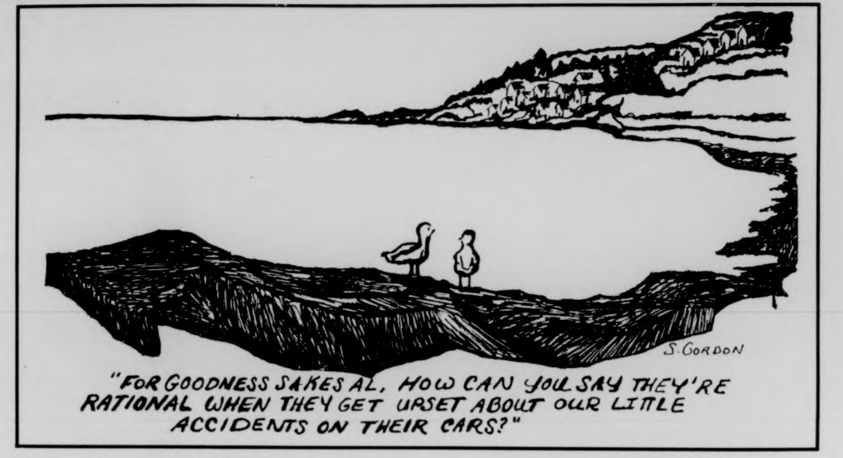
If there is an issue to be discussed in depth, it can be done in a column. Columns are about 65 lines, about two to two and a half pages typed and double-spaced.

To respond to a column, a letter should be submitted. Letters are 30 to 35 lines, approximately one page typed and double-spaced. Letters can also discuss a current issue.

Columns and letters should be submitted typed with the writer's name, address and phone number. Letters responding to letters and columns responding to columns will not be printed.

If an issue raised in a column needs to be addressed, a letter can directly respond to the column and the writer. But, if the issue needs to be addressed in more detail, then a column should be written discussing the issue without mentioning the respective writer's name or the column.

Responses to letters should be done in a column discussing the issue raised, but cannot directly refer to the writer or the letter.



"FOR GOODNESS SAKES AL, HOW CAN YOU SAY THEY'RE RATIONAL WHEN THEY GET UPSET ABOUT OUR LITTLE ACCIDENTS ON THEIR CARS?"

No escaping problems with alcohol

When you first embark on your journey through college, nervousness fills your head as you wonder if you will be able to handle the increased pressures of college life: of being on your own; of making your own decisions; of the hard work involved. However you find it can all be handled with ease because He is always waiting to assist you in your times of desperation.

Erik Sussbauer

When you finish a hard day, you feel that by putting yourself through this drudgery, you are deserving of the ecstasy and freedom only He can give, releasing all the knowledge and stress that has built up in the seemingly microscopic space between your ears before the pressure causes an explosion.

When social burdens take their toll, and the woman or man who caused your heart to flutter with joy decides you are not worthy of their charm, He is your only escape from this land of confusion. You race to Him, using His powers to their fullest, hoping He will take you away from your wretched life.

For a few hours all your worries silently drift away, as your brain cells defy gravity and float around in your lightened skull as gently as a summer breeze. The feeling of invincibility is overcome by a deep slumber which you are sure will never end.

However, you wake up the next afternoon only to find all your problems are still present and accounted for, and they now seem a hundred times worse in a skull that can barely be lifted.

Your only wish is that a few months would flash by in a matter of seconds, bringing you to the magical age of 21, where He can continuously be by your side.

Your driver's license suddenly becomes your greatest asset, allowing you access to Him at any moment. When you are feeling despair from your seemingly worthless existence, feeling that noone likes you, that noone cares, not knowing what heavy loads the future will hold, but thinking they will only be worse, that piece of plastic-coated paper allows you to drown yourself in a cup filled with your only true friend in this otherwise cruel world.

Whether it be at a ball game or an amusement park, when some minute aspect of your life starts to go awry and you suddenly feel rejected, you find comfort in knowing your buddy is always readily available to tranquilize your sorrow.

Does any of this seem at all familiar to you? Think about it. If you say no, you are more than likely lying like a rug.

For many of you the only problem associated with alcohol is driving a vehicle with it in your system. Your idea of helping a friend is taking keys away, or carrying someone to bed when they have less coordination than a one-year-old.

The problem isn't in the driver's seat or in the legs; it's in the cup, bottle, can or slice of jello that you've been consuming. There are many alternative ways to enjoy yourselves in this world.

Unfortunately, you've been missing them in your drunken stupor because you think alcohol is the only necessary ingredient for maximum pleasure. Some of you can't even play an innocent softball game without a bottle or can by your side.

As for assisting in soothing depression or stress, alcohol is probably the worst remedy. Sure, it's an escape. But if you haven't noticed, the problem doesn't disappear just because your senses do for awhile.

Why not confront the situation head-on, think things out rationally, talk to someone about your situation, then go on with life?

Of course, it's much more painful than simply pretending your life is a sponge and soaking it in a bottle, but in the end it will be much more beneficial.

Try to spend a weekend dry, and see what it's like. Imagine yourself as one of Robin Williams' students taking a new perspective on life from a desk top.

Go to a party and observe your peers. Figure out what makes throwing quarters in a glass to make other people drink fun, and why this game can't produce the same pleasure while drinking Coke.

Watch how pathetic some of your friends are as they stagger around and make complete asses of themselves.

But before you start to laugh at them, stop and think for a moment — because it's really not that funny.

Classroom disruption should be condemned by community and students

On Tuesday, April 24, Professor Arthur Keene's Anthropology 206 class was disrupted by an unruly group of White male students. Quick responses by campus security forces prevented the situation from getting completely out of control, and after a brief period of tension, the class was able to continue.

The incident is only one of a number of disturbances that have taken place this year. Classroom disruptions by students have reached alarming proportions this semester. Faculty across campus, regardless of age, gender or race have been subjected to offensive behavior that ranges from incivility to harassment and threats of bodily harm.

Behavior of this sort is absolutely unacceptable. It is incompatible with the foundation upon which our system of education is based.

It violates the nature and mission of the University. It undermines the relationship of trust and respect between student and teacher. It poisons the inquiry and jeopardizes the frank and open exchange of ideas.

It threatens academic freedom and infringes upon the rights upon the rights and safety of others. In short, it has no place on this campus or at any other institution of higher learning.

Classroom disruption is a clear infraction of the Student Code of Conduct which prohibits the willful interruption or disturbances of "the day-to-day conduct of the business of the University." Students found in violation of this policy are liable to disciplinary action by the University and may be subject to civil charges as well.

We expect that those who perpetrated the disruptive behavior in Anthropology 206 will be dealt with expeditiously by the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Office, in a manner appropriate to their offense. We also hope that this action will cause some members of the academic community to reassess their patterns of behavior.

The learning environment of the University of Massachusetts is diverse and vigorous, but it is also fragile. If it is to survive and thrive it must have the support of all segments of the University. The vast majority of our students are responsible, fair-minded and caring individuals. Teaching them is both a pleasure and a privilege.

We realize that they are as troubled by incidents of this sort as are faculty and staff. We would urge them to join us and the rest of the University community in condemning the willful and hostile disruption of our classes.

Greek Area honors top students

By LINDSAY HOADLEY
Collegian Correspondent

At the annual Greek Area scholarship dessert Monday, two students were honored for academic achievement among some 1,500 fraternity and sorority members.

The students are Pamela Haddad of Chi Omega, who is the top graduating student out of 586 in the School of Engineering, and Matthew Zieper of Alpha Epsilon Pi. Both have 3.97 averages.

Some 150 Greek Area residents gathered at the Campus Center for the event, which included a speaker and a short awards ceremony. The event was scheduled to honor Greek Area students with a cumulative grade point average above 3.0.

The guest speaker of the event, University of Massachusetts microbiology professor Albey Reiner, discussed the confusions and insecurities which are commonly felt by students prior to graduation. Reiner said young adults should not feel pressured to know exactly what they want to do with their futures, but rather to take the process one day at a time.

"You must make choices and when you graduate; you must be doing something," he said. "But you do not have to make decisions as to exactly what you want to do for 20 years. Do not be afraid; your first job doesn't have to be your career, it's rare for a first job to be a chosen profession."

"There's an enormous number of changes that occur in how the world seems to you. You keep changing," he explained. "I'm not the person I was at 20, and it would be sad to have my life, at 48, be controlled by definitions of what I wanted of myself at 20."

Jeanne Bolduc, public relations chairman for the Panhellenic Council and coordinator of the event, said that one of the main goals of Greek Council this semester has been "to dispel the image of Greeks as only beer-swilling party animals."

"Many of our chapters were founded with the intention of fostering better academic standing among members," Bolduc said, "It's evident that this ideal is emulated given that 300 Greeks have attained at least a 3.0 cumulative average."

The scholarship dessert is one of many activities arranged for this years' annual Greek Week, a week of events which celebrated the fraternity and sorority involvement in the Greek Area. Other events scheduled for the remainder of the week include Greek Sing at Pearl Street Thursday night, and a volleyball tournament Saturday at Boyden gym.

The event was sponsored by the UMass Panhellenic and Intrafraternal councils.

ARTS & LIVING

Q & A: an action-packed look at the drug war

By RIC OLIVERA
Collegian Correspondent

It's the "Drug War," 1990. Nick Nolte stands in the city shadows with a shiny cold 45 in his hand. Two Puerto Rican men come out of a private bar. The first one begins to run and the other watches in confusion. Sensing something he turns to see Nick Nolte. There is a loud explosion and the Puerto Rican man falls as the blood oozes from his head.

This is the first scene in Q&A, the new movie out from Tri Star Pictures. Nick Nolte stars as Mike Brennan, a cop gone mad. Starring opposite Nolte is Timothy Hutton. Hutton plays Al Reilly, a young assistant district attorney whose first case is "a cut and dry case of justifiable homicide," or so he is told.

Once on the job he encounters Brennan, a larger-than-life hero of the force. Brennan has reported that the "hood" had a gun, and his case was self defense. It was believable and documented on the Q&A.

And then enters Armand Assante, who plays Bobby Texador, a flamboyant cocaine dealer who throws a snag in the "cut-and-dry" investigation. And that's all that you need to know about the plot.

Q&A is directed by Sidney Lumet. This is the first time he has ever directed his own screenplay. Lumet is best known for directing The Verdict which starred Paul Newman. Besides great directing, this film features outstanding performances by Nick Nolte (48 Hours), Charles Dutton (No Mercy) and an unforgettable scene with Armand Assante (Jack the Ripper) squared off against Luis Guzman (True Beliver). Guzman plays a street smart cop and he and Assante square off mouth-to-mouth with slang and intimidation.

Q&A is loaded with racism, homophobia, obscenity and the horrors of political corruption. It addresses the fears of society that most people have. Its characters represent some people we hope do not exist, but do. It is a must see for people trying to figure out the consequences of the "Drug War," and for anyone who stands outside the Student Union, amazed at the level of hate that is spread.

Sick of it All's guide to the hardcore scene

By DANIELLE DOWLING
Collegian Staff

How does one describe hardcore?

One could say that it is an angry music written by angry people who have become disillusioned with a society that is apathetic, self centered, and corrupt.

One could liken it to getting a steel tipped combat boot shoved up your bum.

Regardless, hardcore has existed since the early '80s, spawned by the punk movement of the late '70s, and, some say, will exist as long as there are young people out there who are tired of societal mores and just plain sick of it all.

Continuing in the hardcore tradition of playing loud and furious and writing socially aware lyrics is a ferocious foursome from Queens, New York, who have appropriately named their group Sick of it All.

The group began back in 1985 and consists of Lou Koller on vocals, his brother Pete on guitar, Rich Cipriano on bass, and Arman Mijadi on drums. Currently they have their debut album, Blood, Sweat, and No Tears, out on the In-Effect label, a subsidiary label of Combat Records.

While their label likes to say that Sick of it All is a hardcore/thrash/crossover group, Lou Koller claimed, "We are nothing but hardcore. Our record label likes to call us crossover so that they can sell records, because you get more respect if you say that you're a thrash or crossover band. But that's like spitting in the face of the kids who listen to our music and the scene that we grew up in."

One might say: "What's the difference? Thrash, hardcore, crossover, it's all the same." Lou Koller feels differently.

"Thrash metal took from hardcore without taking the heart and soul of it," he said. "People push hardcore to the side, when that's where all that stuff came from."

"It's strange to go to a metal show these days," his brother Pete added, "and see all of these kids diving off the stage and thrashing around and forming a pit. That's all just blatantly ripped off from the hardcore scene. In the old days, at the metal shows, if anybody did that a fight would have broken out. Now all the metal kids do it because it's cool."

Lou summed up the group's feeling about thrash. "When Testament started out, they sang about demons and hell. Now they're singing about the ecology and the state of the world, when hardcore bands have been singing about that since the early '80s."

In past interviews, the group has claimed to create a sound that depicts reality, not fantasy. When asked what they meant by this claim, Pete Koller replied, "Our sound is so heavy that it shocks you back into reality. The lyrics basically deal with things that happen to us and around us. We don't sing about things that can't bring about change or any kind of opinion."

The group said that they would like to establish an awareness of what's going on with the world through their music. In a self-described disorganized effort to put together songs, the result is music that some claim is too negative.

To that charge, Lou Koller answered, "People will say that we're negative but if you look at the lyrics, you'll find that there is a positive outlook in the end."

"We don't consciously look for things," he said in describing the source of inspiration for their lyrics, "we just watch the news and read the paper."

With their musical attack on a society that they feel is apathetic and concerned only with material gain, one is left to wonder what they would do if they could change the world. "I would start with the ecology," Lou Koller claimed, "because once we get the earth back to normal, we can work on everything else."

MULTICULTURAL AFFAIRS

April 30: victory day for Vietnam

April 30, 1975, is known in the United States and the rest of the "free world" as the fall of Saigon. Propagandized as the defeat of democracy and the spread of communism, people soon saw that the fall of Saigon was in fact a defeat of Western capitalism and U.S. imperialism.

In Vietnam and other independent countries, April 30 is a day of victory, a day of independence for Vietnam's Vietnamese people. In that country, the day is seen as defeat only for the Vietnamese people of England, France and the United States.

The people of Vietnam have for many centuries fought for their independence, first against the Chinese, then the Japanese, the French and later the United States. To many, it has seemed Vietnam has always struggled to build a country that is non-Western and non-totalitarian — a country that can provide its own forms of democracy and social justice, derived from its own culture and traditions.

Vietnam has not been left alone and even today continues to fight. Although troops were withdrawn, the United States has not completely extracted itself. Since 1975, Vietnam continues to fight an economic and political war spearheaded by the United States.

U.S. involvement; what the public doesn't know

For many Americans, Vietnam shall forever be an embarrassment. Whereas Vietnam was devastated politically and physically, the United States was hurt spiritually and socially. Many Americans will continue to probe into and unlearn — relearn facts instead of propaganda — the mysterious Vietnam war.

The history of the U.S.-Vietnam war is deeper than the ten year war, dating back to 1945. After World War II the United States violated its anti-colonialist promises of World War II and suppressed the Vietnamese independence movement.

The U.S. government and media lied to the public about the true situation in North and South Vietnam, about the hidden agenda of U.S. involvement, and about years of secret warfare carried out before the Gulf of Tonkin incident in 1964 which drew public interest.

Many still think that the first U.S. attack on Vietnam took place under President Johnson after the Gulf of Tonkin. After 1945 the Allies freed and rearmed Japanese, rearmed the French who were previously disarmed by the Japanese, and sent British troops, who were mostly Indians under English rule, into South Vietnam to restore Western control.

The U.S. sold France a hundred and $60 million worth of vehicles and industrial equipment, not different from the non-military humanitarian aid to Nicaraguan contras in 1985. By the end of the French-Vietnam war in 1954, the U.S. was paying for 78 percent of the French costs.

United States Secretary of State John Foster Dulles, in a conversation with France's Foreign Minister Georges Bidault, asked "what if we give you two atomic bombs?"

The United States has long since imposed itself on Southeast Asia. It was with U.S. imperialism's money and weapons and instruction that France attempted to colonialize Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia.

At the 1954 Geneva Conference, England, France, China, the United States and the Soviet Union agreed to an internationally supervised election for a reunified Vietnam.

Later that year the United States installed its Vietnamese puppet Ngo Dinh Diem, a World War II collaborator with Japan then living in Princeton, N.J., as Prime Minister of Saigon. Ngo was supplied with military equipment and advisors who helped him to prevent the promised election.

During the four years after Geneva the United States turned South Vietnam into a military base and dictatorship. U.S. funds began rolling into Saigon and reached $2 billion in 1956.

From 1945 to the present, U.S. involvement in Vietnam included covert action, massive invasion and the dropping of over seven million tons of bombs.

Top U.S. officials proceeded to tell professional lies to the U.S. public. Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara announced that the Geneva Agreements of 1954 happily provided for the emergence of an "independent entity" — the state of South Vietnam.

President Johnson told the American Bar Association that the "agreements guaranteed the independence of South Vietnam and that for ten years, through the Eisenhower administration, the Kennedy administration, and this administration, we have had one consistent aim-observance of the 1954 agreements."

However President Eisenhower had sent 400 U.S. military "advisors" to Vietnam. By 1963, after Kennedy's assassination, the number had grown to 16,000 U.S. soldiers taking part in military confrontations, having flown some 7,000 air missions, lost 23 aircraft and 108 soldiers.

In 1985 Senator J. William Fulbright of Arkansas said: "The biggest lesson I learned from Vietnam is not to trust Government statements . . . They fit the facts to fit the policy . . . The American people don't have any idea of what is going on in Central America . . . We made a great mistake in Vietnam and are making another one in Central America."

The postwar economy

The misinformation and disinformation in the U.S. media perpetuates propaganda that in Vietnam "there is nothing good under the sun." Obviously the Vietnamese government hasn't been flawless in applying its policies, given the immense pressures of the need for economic aid.

The struggle of reconstruction seems impossible after the years of war which devastated the land and its people in addition to the impact of U.S. trade embargo.

The United States, having failed to impose its dominance in Vietnam, has attempted to force Vietnam deep into the Soviet camp, thus provide retroactive justification for the war.

However, Vietnam has serious differences with the Soviet Union and although it must accept some level of Soviet aid, it struggles to form its own form of socialism.

After World War II, the United States had supplied economic aid to rebuilding Germany, Italy and Japan. Despite this precedent the United States provided no assistance. Instead it placed strict trade embargo and restricted private humanitarian aid such as food, medicine and agricultural equipment. In addition, the United States stopped the World Bank and the International Development Fund from giving loans to Vietnam and influenced its allies to do the same.

Vietnam had to go back to the battle field in May 1975 when Cambodia's Pol Pot, supported by China and at some point the United States, began invading Vietnam. This fighting lasted until 1979. But war persisted as China invaded Vietnam and was eventually driven back to China.

Essentially, fighting in Vietnam did not end until 1980 and reconstruction had a chance, without the distraction of war, to begin.

Prior to the U.S. war, Vietnam's chief export was rubber. The war destroyed the 350,000 acres of rubber trees. Much of the other agricultural land, for tea, coffee and jute, were destroyed by bombs, mines and chemical spraying. In 1977, a United Nations report estimated that 1.5 million water buffalos were killed.

For a predominantly agricultural people, this physical destruction of the land from wartime plus the U.S. embargo, which has been more effective than all the military weapons used in ten years, rendered the country practically helpless.

The building of a market economy has been hindered by cruel policies of political and economic encirclement and isolation.

When U.S. troops left, Vietnam automatically lost $1.5 billion annually that the United States had been spending in the South. It was money spent with corruption and turned the South into a non-productive consumer society, but it artificially kept a bankrupt economy above water.

The Vietnam economy hit rock bottom in 1979. The government tried to go too fast with too little peacetime experience. Vietnam's officials speak openly about their mistakes and have responded to grassroots initiatives which seem to offer positive solutions for the people.

In 1986, Vietnam began its own perestroika, or doi moi, which has drastically turned the economy around in the right direction.

Between 1986 and 1988, inflation was cut from 700 percent to 50 percent. The state is now only generating little over one quarter of national income.

Vietnam has created favorable conditions for the development of all sectors of the economy, concentrating on the production of food and foodstuffs, consumer goods and export goods.

Vietnam abolished the bureaucratically centralized mechanism based on state subsidies and applied a market mechanism in combination with with planning at the macro level as well as expanding foreign economic relations.

In past decades, due to wars, Vietnam had to import grain. In 1989 it not only produced enough for its people but it exported 1.4 million tons of rice.

Vietnam's relations with foreign countries also expanded. Its foreign-investment law granted 105 investment licenses with the total investment capital of $857 million by the end of 1989. The majority of investments come from Australia, Hong Kong, France, Belgium, Thailand and the United Kingdom. There is no chance, however, that capitalism will impose itself under current conditions. Although there are free enterprises and privately owned businesses it does not necessarily lead to capitalism.

Postwar social conditions

With the United States punishing Vietnam politically and economically, it's no wonder that the "boat people" fled economic suffrage. Of course the United States hailed this to be proof that communism doesn't work and Vietnamese people were fleeing a totalitarian state into the arms of Western freedom.

The refugee is an international and historical character. During and immediately following the American revolution, a higher percentage of colonists fled to Canada than the percentage of Vietnamese population who fled Vietnam.

After 1975 Vietnam offered to release Southern prisoners if the United States would take them, however the United States refused. These prisoners, when released, contributed to the number of the boat people, much as the Tories comprised the bulk of American colonists fleeing to Canada.

It is important to clarify that the first wave of Vietnamese refugees, immediately following 1975, were for the most part economic refugees, people who had sold out their country and bought into Western capitalism — the capitalism of England, France and America's Vietnamese.

The second, more recent wave of refugees, claimed to be fleeing into Western freedom, left due to economic starvation, perpetuated by the U.S. trade embargo.

Howcome, than, did the United States not provide asylum and send ships and planes to transport these refugees safely or rescue them from the oceans. If economic aid reached sufficient levels, the refugee problem would disappear.

Today Vietnam accepts voluntary repatriation of refugees without punishment. It does not accept compulsory repatriation. Much U.S. media attention has been given to human rights violations in Vietnam being the driving force behind the refugees.

The Vietnamese government has so far ratified eight of 22 international legal instruments concerning human rights, whereas in the United States only seven of the instruments have been ratified.

What Vietnam is doing concerning human rights is fully consistent with the declaration on Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and other international legal instruments to which Vietnam is a party.

Today Vietnam is still fighting for its independence on a political and economic level. Its people have found a time to rebuild and hope for no more wars.

Will the United States continue in its efforts to punish the Vietnamese for their outright rejection of Western domination? Will the United States continue to drive Vietnam into economic disaster to prove that developing countries cannot be independent of one of the superpowers?

If Vietnam and other developing nations fail, it would justify current U.S. foreign relations against people who want to develop, free of Western capitalist corporate injustice, free of hard-line communist bureaucratic tyranny, and free from control by both of them.

After the Korean truce, a U.S. defeat, the United States succeeded in overthrowing the democratically elected governments of Iran, 1953, Guatamala, 1954, and it failed in Cuba at the Bay of Pigs, 1961. And it failed again, in its greatest military defeat, Vietnam, April 30, 1975.

The U.S. could never accept another defeat in a new Vietnam. This is apparent in its policies towards Central America, the Phillipines, Angola and so on. In 1954, the CIA installed Ngo Dinh Diem in South Vietnam. In 1963 it conspired to assassinate him. In 1969 the CIA installed Colonel Muammar al-Quaddafi. Today it is trying to kill him.

Soelle: A provocative look at religion

By JAY ALLAIN

The Strength of the Weak
Dorothee Soelle
Westminster Press

For many of us, religion was something we were weaned on. In our formative years, God generally assumed a niche somewhere above homework and chores, somewhere below having fun. Overall, religiosity fit rather neatly into conventional middle class existence and was only resurrected for personal tragedies or on rare occasions when one experienced life in a way which defied rational explanations. In short, God was a mind-boggling entity best kept in the proverbial medicine cabinet for use in emergencies.

And now, as we embark on adulthood, a howling silence tends to engulf talk of God. Perhaps few of us are willing to manifestly challenge the death of God in a secularized world. Yet Dorathee Soelle, a leader in the European peace movement, has the audacity to refashion Christianity in terms that will unsettle us. But in a troubled age why risk further disturbance, some will ask? Let me share my thoughts on why Soelle's The Strength of the Weak is worth the turbulence.

If one often feels a sense of moral disintegration today, Soelle's opening essay, "Rebellion Against Banality," helps to identify it. "Mass atheism," the author observes, "has taken over without a struggle." Soelle sketches the lives of two elderly German women, Mrs. K and Mrs. S.

Of the former, she detects one who "was superficially Christianized by instruction for confirmation, but her religion had no meaning either socially or individually." Mrs. K becomes Everywoman, Everyman. Soelle sketches the sterility of Mrs. K's life and dares us to see ourselves in a woman who "exemplifies how the profound and genuine desires of human beings can be silenced and suffocated and their passionate energies led off in wrong directions."

In a brilliant essay entitled "Uprising and Resurrection," the author conveys the dehumanization that work can produce in a single sentence. "A pieceworker in an electronics factory told how she used to cringe and duck down whenever the foreman came up on her from behind." What can be done? For starters she insists that we reclaim words like "rebellion" and "resurrection" from the bourgeois sludge that envelops them. And she invites us to reconsider Prometheus, the Greek god who stole fire from the gods, one who Marx called "the greatest saint in the calendar," and to draw the obscured connections between Prometheus and Christ. Soelle reminds us how in Aeschylus' play, Prometheus was "full of mercy but experienced no mercy himself; he freed humankind but could not free himself." The costs of "loving humankind too much," she posits, "have not lessened from ancient times."

One final essay I would cite is her provocative "On the Oppression of Men." While some feminists have reacted at the mere title, Soelle's scathing critique of masculinity is must reading. Rather than trivializing the oppression of women, the author explores men's impoverishment. She writes, the typical male "does not dance. He does not cry. Can we imagine him praying? The idea is ludicrous." The Strength of the Weak is a most stimulating exploration into the modern maelstrom where mass Atheism, consumerism and vibrant religiosity collide. Avoiding the platitudes that trivialize much contemporary religious thought, Soelle dares to confront the most ominous forces at large today while fashioning a most gripping faith. Despite the pervasive nature of modern technocracy and the various ideologies that support it, Soelle reminds us that we have deeper roots — roots which are healthier, more loving and more enduring.

To Work and to Love: issues of growth and self

By JAY ALLAIN
Special to the Collegian

To Work and to Love
Dorothee Soelle
Fortress Press

Do you ever grapple with a conspiratorial view of maturation? That is, the truth about the really important areas in life — work, relationships, belief — have all been suppressed. The role models who could guide us through this morass — silenced. And even the accepted wisdom reflected in pithy maxims like "don't discuss politics or religion," merge with the demands of everyday life to subvert one's reaching for meaning.

Perhaps rather than a conspiracy, it may simply be that our parents and teachers have themselves been conditioned to the dictates of our unique socio-economic system. The emotional and spiritual damage it renders remains a taboo subject — a topic unfit for the "well-adjusted."

However, like Vergil guiding Dante through Inferno, Theologian Dorethee Soelle provides us with To Work and to Love, a guidebook for the soul.

In three distinct but interelated sections — the Creation, work and relationships, she explores the sense of alienation and lovelessness that plague so many throughout the West. But her analysis, while more probing than most will be accustomed to, refuses to yield to the discouragement that many feel today.

From the first, the reader understands that this is no sentimental "faith-is-the-answer" treatise. Instead, Soelle faces what British historian E.P. Thompson has called the West's embrace of "exterminis:" the rape of the earth, the war against the poor and the nuclear arms threat.

"When I first heard the phrase 'to undo creation,' I found myself getting in touch with the depth of my faith in the goodness of creation," Soelle relates.

Breaking from orthodox Christianity however, Soelle rejects the notion of a finished Creation. Instead, she suggests Creation invites, in fact requires, our engagement; she overturns the image of a severe, authoritarian God.

To Work and To Love is a profound analysis of how we live, and how faith and struggle can transform our lives.

Soelle's vision and commitment flow from deep, enduring sources within herself and her world. And as such, it is a world view capable of withstanding the assaults of our age.

Released hostage tells daughter he thought others had been freed

MALDEN (AP) — Frank Reed's daughter said her father told her Tuesday he was surprised to learn American hostages Terry Anderson and Thomas Sutherland had not been freed, since they had been separated about a year ago.

"He said he had been with them, but that he hadn't seen Terry Anderson or Mr. Sutherland for about a year," said Marilyn Langston, 33. "He was disturbed that they weren't out. He thought for sure they would have been released."

Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, was abducted on a Beirut street in 1985. Sutherland, acting agriculture dean at American University, was abducted that same year.

In an interview from Wiestbaden, West Germany, with a reporter from television station WHDH of Boston, Reed's wife told of her reunion with the husband she had not seen in 42 months. She also gave dtails of his ordeal, including being chained and forced to sit blindfolded for much of the time.

"There was silence," Fahima Reed said of the reunion. "Nobody spoke a word, we just hugged each other. Then he started breaking up. He cried. He broke down and cried."

Mrs. Reed said her husband tried to cheer up his son, 9-year-old Tarek.

"We were there to cheer Frank. But Frank was cheering Tarek, trying to make him laugh, and we ended up laughing, the three of us."

The weakened Reed tried to lift his son into the air, but could not. "He was so happy to be with us again," she said. Reed could not sit still and his concentration was erratic, she said.

"That's because he was chained and sitting constantly so he wanted to move around. I had to keep following him with my eyes," she said in the interview.

She said Reed told her, "I have to be talking because I was kept for three years, confined by myself, couldn't talk to anybody, and now I just feel like talking," she said. "And he's talking, talking, talking, I could hardly get in a word."

Reed was angry that Anderson and Sutherland had not been released, she said.

"He was angry, very, very angry the moment we mentioned the other hostages," Mrs. Reed said. "He had no idea that Terry Anderson and Tom Sutherland were still hostages. His thoughts were that they had been released a year ago."

Mrs Reed said her husband had no idea he was going to be released "because he was told so many times that he was going to be released that he stopped . . . he stopped taking that into consideration."

"He said they would come and tell him he was going to be released "and I would say okay and nod my head." He said he was not excited. "I couldn't get excited because I knew it wasn't going to happen."

Despite all he had been through, Reed kept his sense of humor, making mirth of some of his experiences.

"He has a terrific sense of humor," Mrs. Reed said. "He was relating some of the stories of things he went through and I just broke down with laughter. I was laughing like I never laughed in my life."

Langston said Reed called her about 5:15 a.m. from a military hospital in West Germany.

"He said 'Hi dear,' and my heart just started beating fast," Langston said. "It seemed unreal seeing him on television, but hearing his voice, everything seemed brighter."

Langston said her father said he had been blindfolded for much of his 42 months in captivity, and had lost 60 pounds during the ordeal.

"And he said he hadn't been able to talk for three and a half years," Langston said. "He talked most of the time. He just wanted to talk. I could hardly get a word in edgewise."

"But he sounded pretty good, pretty lively, considering what he's been through," she said.

Monday night, Reed made a brief call to his 91-year-old mother, Leota Sprague.

"He said 'Hi Mom.' I said 'Hi Frankie.'" Sprague said. "I knew his voice right away. I was thrilled. I said 'It's so good to hear your voice.'"

Mystery solved in Webster case, but questions still unanswered

By ARLENE LEVINSON
The Associated Press

BOSTON — They tried to find Joan Webster with psychics and a $50,000 reward.

But in the end it was a veterinarian walking her dog who found the bones of the Harvard architecture student who spurred an intensive search and wide publicity when she vanished at an airport in 1981.

The discovery also raised the name once again of another well-known figure in Massachusetts, longtime suspect Leonard "The Quahog" Paradiso, a small-time hood doing life for murder.

Paradiso had never been charged in the Webster case, in which Essex County District Attorney Kevin Burke said he "became a suspect almost immediately" after Webster disappeared from Logan International Airport.

The case was revived after veterinarian Karen Wolf last month stumbled across part of a skull in the woods in Hamilton, a wealthy community 25 miles north of Boston.

More bones were found after that.

Joan Webster was last seen at Logan International Airport on Nov. 28, 1981. The native of Glen Ridge, N.J., and Syracuse University graduate was headed back to the Harvard's School of Design after a Thanksgiving visit with her parents.

Webster was a successful and active student who had made the dean's list at Syracuse. She liked skiing, sailing, tennis and photography and had traveled widely, her parents said.

The search for Webster turned up her wallet 300 feet from the place Marie Ianuzzi's body was dumped two years earlier in a bed of rocks behind a fish store north of Boston. Paradiso was convicted of the 20-year-old Ianuzzi's murder in 1984.

After Webster vanished, family and friends of the missing woman offered a $50,000 reward. A psychic said he saw her body in a pond close to where her bones were ultimately found.

Particular attention focused in 1985 on Paradiso after a former cellmate alleged that the former fish merchant claimed involvement in killing Webster.

Timothy Burke, who was Suffolk County prosecutor at the time, said in an affidavit that Paradiso told an informant that he had forced Webster onto his 26-foot cabin cruiser, the Malafemmina — Italian for "bad woman" — with a fake .357-Caliber Magnum. According to the account, he hit her on the head with a whiskey bottle and dumped her body in Boston Harbor.

Now lots of people want to talk to the 45-year-old Paradiso, a former fish seller from Revere who got his nickname (pronounced COE-hog) from a clam peculiar to New England.

Paradiso, who has used the media to defend himself in the past, is not talking much. He did not return a phone call Tuesday, and a spokesman for the Department of Correction said the Walpole inmate is refusing to speak to reporters. It could not be immediately determined if he was currently being represented by an attorney.

His convictions include rape and attempted murder of a hitchhiker in 1975, as well as the strangulation of Ianuzzi in 1979.

He was also found guilty on federal bankruptcy fraud charges for claiming to be worth $10 when he was working at a lobster company and had $10,000 in the bank.

When the prison informant linked him to Webster's disappearance, Paradiso denied the allegations. He protested his innocence in writing to newspapers, the Suffolk District attorney, police and even Webster's parents.

"Now do you think a high-class smart girl like Joan Webster from a good family, with money, is going to get into a car with a guy like me smelling of fish?" he told the Daily Evening Item of Lynn six years ago.

He sued Boston magazine for $3 million, saying he was libeled in a story linking him to the Webster case.

That suit was thrown out in 1987 by a judge who said Paradiso's reputation was so bad he was "libel-proof."

Kevin Burke, the Essex County prosecutor, indicated Paradiso wasn't ruled out even though finding the bones in the woods seems to discount the Boston Harbor version of the story.

Shards of metal and glass stuck in Paradiso's index finger, thought to be part of the fake gun, became the subject of a protracted and much publicized legal battle over the inmate's right to keep the contents of his injured finger secret. He underwent forced surgery but it yielded no new evidence.

Meanwhile, Webster's father, George, said he was not prepared to comment.

CHERNOBYL CANDLE — An unidentified woman shields her candle as she is one of thousands in the main square of the Ukranian capital Kiev Thursday, taking part in a demonstration to mark the fourth anniversary of the Chernobyl nuclear plant disaster. Residents across southwest Soviet regions most contaminated by the blast held protests calling for better medical treatment and radiation protection.

Quinlan discusses facing dying at friend's hand

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — The first time Joe Quinlan met state police investigator John Mace it was as a young reporter rousted out of bed to try to scrape together a story on a suspicious fire.

True to form, Mace was the crusty veteran, knowledgeable but taciturn.

"He never told reporters anything. For some reason, I didn't mind it. It was maybe the way he was," said Quinlan, who was an Associated Press reporter in Springfield when he met Mace in 1982.

Two years later, when Quinlan joined the staff of the district attorney's office as "gofer" working his way through law school he was surprised and faintly flattered when the more experienced Mace befriended him, showing him the ropes around the Hampden County district attorney's office.

Then came the night last fall when Quinlan, now a 32-year-old prosecutor, walked in on his friend who was trying to cover up evidence of embezzlement.

"It was all like a nightmare," said Quinlan, a graduate of the University of Massachusetts. "I still haven't really got it in perspective. In hindsight, it was pretty clear what happened. He had embezzled all that money and he had to account for a large portion of it."

The strange story of the cop and the prosecutor played out this month as a judge sentenced Mace, 47, a former state police detective lieutenant, to at least 10 years in state prison.

Mace, who pleaded guilty earlier to charges to assault with intent to kill, attempted arson and larceny, made a tearful courtroom apology to Quinlan.

Prosecutors said Mace had been stealing for three years from funds entrusted to him and was trying to start a fire in the district attorney's office on Oct. 23 to cover up the evidence.

The office normally would have been deserted, but that evening Quinlan had returned to work late on a domestic violence case. Noticing a closed door that should have been open, he investigated. "I walked over there and I turned the knob at a full arms length and I pushed the door open and I stepped back and he was suddenly in the frame of the door," he said. "He came at me there."

Quinlan said he was dragged back to the library, where Mace grabbed a knife. He broke free once, was caught, got away again and managed to pull a fire alarm, summoning aid.

After S&L failure, fear spreads in New England

BOSTON (AP) — The recent government seizure of a Massachusetts bank could be the first of many more federal takeovers in New England as bad real estate loans push savings institutions to the brink of failure, analysts said Tuesday.

Government regulators last week took control of Home Owners Federal Savings Bank, the largest savings and loan in Massachusetts. But the storm clouds had been gathering over the New England banking industry for months.

The slumping economy, combined with a declining real estate market, has given many banks a staggering amount of troubled loans. Banks have had to divert money into reserves while watching their capital shrink to precarious levels.

"Are we going to see a rash of closures in the next few month — probably not," said Gerard Cassidy, a banking analyst at Tucker Anthony, Inc. "But when this thing finally washes out, three, four, five years from now, we're going to look back, and there probably is going to be at least two dozen."

James McFarland, deputy regional director of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., said there would probably be a "handful" of failures this year.

But he stressed that well below 10 percent of the banks in New England have poor ratings from the government.

In Massachusetts and Connecticut, 32 banks at the end of 1989 were losing money so fast that it would deplete their equity within one year, according to Veribanc Inc., a Wakefield firm that monitors the industry.

"It's a good bet there will some seizures among them, especially with the economy going the way it is," said Warren Heller, research director for Veribanc.

In fact, analysts say the direction of the economy will be the most important factor in determining whether weak banks survive.

Bank of New England Corp., for example, lost more than $1 billion last year, due largely to its real estate portfolio. The bank is now operating under government orders and has instituted a plan to improve its financial health, but executives have acknowledged the recovery hinges on the New England economy.

Other banks have publicly admitted they are in peril. Home National Corp., Milford, has disclosed its subsidiary Home National Bank is seeking financial assistance from the federal government to continue operating.

Eliot Bank in Boston reported a $30 million loss for the fourth quarter of 1989 and said it expected regulators to "take such actions as they consider appropriate" if the bank could not raise capital.

"I think that these increases are very unfair because before we came to the University I expected to pay such-and-such an amount and now that they've added this extra amount, I've found difficulty in paying it," said Williams, who plans to be a plaintiff in the case.

He said the tuition hike is a threat to his being able to continue attending UMass, as well as creating additional stress during the semester. He said he works more than 20 hours each week at campus jobs to help pay for his tuition.

Williams said it was unfair for the University to charge him extra tuition after he registered for the spring semester.

Valvo believes the tuition increase impairs the contract "these students had with the universities when they registered in November and December. They had paid their tuition bill when they were notified they owned an additional $485."

"It would be important for people who haven't paid the increase yet and don't want to pay and need transcripts or diploma to get involved," he said. "Ordinarily the school won't do something until you paid — these people may have their plans derailed because they haven't paid and can't pay."

Attorney General James Shannon is scheduled to represent the regents when the case comes to trial, according to Terry Zoulas, spokesperson for the regents.

Regent Ronald Alman said the Board's decision to increase the tuition of non-resident students was dictated by the state's economic situation.

"Our basic responsibility is to the students of the commonwealth. We're trying to be as fair as we can to all students," said Alman, a regent since August, 1987. "In an economic situation, we're looking closely at non-residents.

"I don't think there was anything legally incorrect with the decision to raise the tuition of the non-resident students," Alman said, adding that he felt he spoke for all the regents.

However, Valvo said the Budget Reform and Control Act of 1989, an effort by the legislature to cut the budget by charging an additional $3 million in tuition to non-residents, set the stage state for the regents' breaching their contract with students.

Chancellor/President Duffey said he was not surprised a suit had been filed.

"I can understand people being upset about this, I was pretty upset about it myself. The objectionable thing was that it was one during the year," said Duffey.

Duffey said he even wrote a letter, published in the Boston Globe, asking Gov. Dukakis to veto the bill. "I used a different argument, asking Massachusetts not to discourage out of state students. We need talent, that's what the state lives on."

Duffey said while he is not opposed to tuition hikes, he is opposed to "tuition hikes that happen arbitrarily in the middle of the year."

Valvo said he had had only a passing knowledge of the fall rallies before working on the case. "It wasn't a strong interest of mine," he said.

"I've since talked to a lot of students and parents about the unfairness of [the tuition hike], people who are struggling to the edge to pay their children's tuition and then get a surprise like this," he said. "It just doesn't seem fair."

Valvo said he is not charging students who join his lawsuit because the most a student could win is the $485. He said he hopes the case will be decided upon by the end of the summer.

"I'm hoping we'll have some action in the case before the end of the summer so students who are planning to transfer or graduate won't have their transcript held up because they couldn't pay the increase," he said.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES(March 21-April 19): Your generous nature makes this a happy time for your friends and relatives. Use your special talents to help those less fortunate. Constructive changes will benefit you.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20): Be objective about changes at work. Money is the key to launching a business venture. Mate is very supportive. A financial problem requires a long-term approach. New investments begin to pay off.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20): You gain new self-confidence from working for a special cause. The good will your efforts create will pay off at both work and home. Passions still run high where money matters are concerned.

CANCER(Jaun 21-July 22): A highly rewarding work day lies ahead. Get a jump on the competition by making a new budget. Loved one praises you for doing a good job. Your privacy should be prized and protected.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22): Talent and hard work are still the keys to success. Try no to jump the gun in a family matter. Tradition will prevail. Distant affairs could put a dent in your budget.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22): Try not to discuss touchy subjects with parents who are under pressure. Regrets may have prevented you from renewing a wonderful friendship. Summon up your courage and make that telephone call!

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22): Ignore any gossip about a loved one. Tension lessens when a parent-child conflict is resolved. Each needs the other's support. Accept the boss's view as correct for now. Renew a friendship.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21): You may find it difficult to cut through red tape today. Key people could be unavailable. Romance has its usual ups and downs. A change of lifestyle will help you feel better about yourself.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21): A partnership is going through a period of renewal that will make it stronger than ever. Ignore both skeptics and skinflints. Volunteer work brings great satisfaction.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19): There are some things you should handle alone. You can count on the cooperation of a child who is truly motivated. Outline your goals before starting something new.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18): If progress is slow, rethink your strategy. Your actions could seem arbitrary if you do not explain them. Your business connections will put you in the right spot at the right time.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20): The mail brings good news. Accept your mate's decision as your own. Find projects you can handle alone. You cannot expect much help from people who are caught up in their own projects.

died the UMass postseason picture with victories at The Hill this season.

UMass lost its other game to Cornell (having an off year), and a win over an inferior Dartmouth team has been the only success against an Ivy Leaguer in 1990.

Brown is in no way a pushover. The Bruins have beaten Harvard and No. 6 Loyola and have dropped tight ones to Yale and No. 8 Princeton.

This game was originally scheduled to be played on April 4, but heavy rains left Providence under about three feet of water and it couldn't be made up until tonight.

If anything, that has helped the Gorillas in a way. They are a better team now than at that time, and now they have some incentive to win.

Oh yeah, almost neglected to mention that UMass coach Dick Garber is going for his 300th career win. If UMass gets the victory, Garber will become only the ninth lacrosse coach of all-time to reach that milestone.

It won't be easy to top the Bruins. They aren't flying as high as their namesakes in Boston, but they've done alright just the same.

Sophomore attack Darren Lowe has been the master passer, tossing out a nation-best 56 assists (UMass junior Jim McAleavey is second with 52, by the way) to go along with 20 goals.

Fellow sophomore attack Andrew Towers has been Lowe's main target, what with 51 goals in 12 games. Senior midfielder Rich Tuohey (37-9-46) knows how to find the net, as well.

In goal, the Bruins go with senior Steven Ayers, who has allowed 95 goals in 12 games (a 10.12 average) while stopping 59.6 percent of shots he's faced.

It's no secret that the Gorillas have been having their best games when the defense is on. The offense has taken care of itself, but Garber wouldn't mind seeing a performance similar to the second half against Rutgers.

Jim McAleavey (right) became just the third player in UMass history to score 200 career points, surpassing that milestone in Monday's win over Boston College. McAleavey is second in the country in assists with 52 entering tonight's key game against fourth-ranked Brown in Providence, R.I.

come out with more defensive effort."

On Monday, Knicks forward Charles Oakley criticized his teammates for lack of intensity and for being more concerned with their own point totals.

"I didn't necessary like to see it in the paper, but what he said was basically true," Jackson said. "He said we have to rebound better and we do. He said we have to have more defensive intensity, and we do."

Celtics still seek improvement against Knicks

NEW YORK (AP) — Coach Jimmy Rodgers doesn't buy the theory that the Boston Celtics only have to keep playing the same way to beat the New York Knicks.

The Celtics won Game 2 of their best-of-five series by 29 points, set an NBA playoff record with 157 points and that might satisfy most coaches, but not Rodgers.

"With two full days of practice, we want to upgrade our game in a couple of areas," Rodgers said. "It's absolutely necessary to go in there playing better."

Rodgers didn't specify in what areas the Celtics need improvement, but he believes the team has to "build on the positives — shooting, rebounding and free-throw shooting."

In building a 2-0 lead in the series entering tonight's game at Madison Square Garden, the Celtics shot 61.9 percent from the field, 93.3 percent from the free throw line and outrebounded the Knicks, 85-65.

"We can't discount the fact that although we're playing great basketball now, we have to continue it," Rodgers said. "This is a very confident group."

Boston guard Reggie Lewis, 24, the only Celtics starter younger than 32, is brimming with confidence. He has 43 points in two games.

"They have to worry about me although they'd rather have me shooting from the outside than the big men inside," Lewis said. "They have to give up something, so I have to make them pay for it."

Meanwhile, Knicks coach Stu Jackson cut yesterday's practice short because it had more intensity than any workout this season.

"They know how they looked Saturday and I didn't have to say anything," Jackson said. "Our pride's at stake, and we have to

It's do-or-die for Gorillas against Brown

Playoff berth on the line; Garber seeking 300th win

By JIM CLARK

The Gorillas will need a strong defensive effort from the likes of Matt Garber (36) and Gary Wood (5) against Brown tonight in Providence, R.I.

Ever had one of those exams that seem to be making or breaking your entire life? A pass or a fail teetering on the result of a couple of hours work?

That's how the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team feels going into tonight's game against Brown University (6 p.m. at Providence, R.I.).

For all intents and purposes, a win tonight has the Gorillas (9-3) on track for an NCAA playoff berth for the fifth consecutive season. A loss, and it's most likely "outside looking in" when the NCAA pairings are announced May 13.

UMass was ranked 11th in this week's U.S. Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association poll. But that's only an artificial indicator of who's going to the big dance. It's a couple of guys (probably smoking stogies) from the NCAA who'll lock themselves into a closet and decide the real fates of the collegiate lacrosse world.

In the past, the criterion for a borderline team has been "who have they beaten?" For UMass this year, it's basically been "who has beaten you?" because the Gorillas haven't had a giant win yet.

OK, OK, last Saturday's win at Rutgers was big. But in the eyes of the NCAA, Rutgers isn't one of those teams that can lose a game and make the experts choke on their hot dogs.

Brown is.

The Bruins come into this game ranked fourth in the nation, although they are third in the Ivy League. The top two teams are Yale and Harvard, both of whom mud-

Women's tennis ends season

Minutewomen finish spring 3-3; tournament fundraiser successful

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's tennis team finished what many thought would be their final spring season yesterday afternoon at the Upper Boyden Courts.

But thanks to their own hard work and some help from the community, the Minutewomen will be able to continue in a sense next year.

The team held a May Day Tennis Tournament this past weekend as a fundraiser to try to cover expenses, and was overwhelmed with the turnout which helped raise nearly $1,500.

"We raised a lot of money, almost double what we expected," said UMass coach Edwin Gentzler. "I think we'll be able to meet the expenses I hoped to cover."

Gentzler said the money from the three-day single-elimination tourney will go toward the rental of indoor training facilities during the winter.

Although the athletic department won't allow the team to compete even if it raised the money, Gentzler plans to arrange scrimmage schedule, with money needed only for travel and meal expenses.

"I think this shows a lot of people in the area care about the program," Gentzler said. "We had UMass students, UMass faculty, coaches of other teams playing."

Mauricio Justice captured the men's A singles title, while Dan Rosenberg was the men's B champion. UMass team member Gail Girasella was the women's singles champion.

In doubles play, the team of Bob Szlozek and Jack Larereo won the men's title, while Smith College tennis coaches Chris Davis and Deedie Steele were the women's winners. In the mixed doubles play, it was Jack Rosenblum and Corinne Dugas.

As for yesterday's match, the Minutewomen wrapped up their season by dropping a tough 6-3 decision to visiting Dartmouth College.

UMass was able to capture two singles matches and one doubles match from the Big Green.

The singles winners were No. 3 seed Shizuko Yamasaki, who rallied for a 5-7, 6-3, 6-2 win. At fourth singles, Amy Ryan was a straight-set 6-3, 7-6 victor.

Girasella dropped a three-set match, taking the middle set 6-0, but falling in the end sets, 6-3 and 6-1. Kere Eddy won her first set at No. 2, 6-1, but fell short at the end, 4-6, 3-6.

Allison Agnew (6-0, 6-4) and Kelly Crim (6-3, 6-2) were both swept at the No. 5 and 6 singles, respectively.

Down 4-2, UMass needed a sweep in the doubles play to salvage the win, but could muster only a victory at No. 1, where Girasella and Eddy took a 7-6, 2-6, 7-2 win.

Yamasaki and Ryan (6-4, 6-3) and Grim and Kerri Kaminski (6-1, 7-6) dropped their matches in straight sets.

In the end, the success of the team and the support displayed by the tournament have Gentzler optimistic for next season.

"We finished 3-3. I got to play some freshmen [yesterday], and the whole team is freshmen and sophomores," Gentzler said.

Baseball in a fog vs. Maine

Minutemen manage only two hits in 4-1 setback to Black Bears

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

It's bad enough the University of Massachusetts baseball team had to face 23rd-ranked Maine yesterday afternoon without having to battle the elements as well.

A dense fog hindered the opening game of the doubleheader and forced the cancellation of the second game altogether. In the end, the Minutemen were rendered helpless against the Black Bears in dropping a 4-1 decision at Portland, Me.

Maine hurler Ben Burlingame held the Minutemen to just two hits, both coming in the second inning. After that, Burlingame settled down and retired the final 17 batters he faced.

For UMass, freshman Daryle Corriveau didn't pitch badly, but was victimized by the longball. Brian Seguin's two-run homer in the bottom of the first was all Burlingame needed to lead the Black Bears (23-17) to their 20th win in their last 22 games.

UMass (23-17) rallied a bit in the second when sophomore right fielder Brian Bright nailed his team-leading ninth home run of the season, a solo shot. But after a single by Derek Dana, Burlingame kept the Minutemen off the bases for the duration.

Maine added its final two runs in the bottom of the second, one coming on a solo dinger by Tim Scott. Corriveau also had a string of perfection, retiring 10 Bears in a row at one point.

But there was no rally available for Corriveau, who saw his record drop to 2-5 on the year. He allowed just five hits while walking three and striking out four.

The Minutemen play their final home game of the season tomorrow against crosstown rival Amherst (3 p.m. at Lorden Field). The Lord Jeffs traditionally take this affair lightly, treating it with slightly less regard than a visit from the Pope.

UMass finishes the regular season by traveling to Central Connecticut Saturday (single game, 6 p.m.) and Northeastern on Tuesday (doubleheader, 1 p.m.) before heading back to Boyertown for the Atlantic 10 tournament May 11-13.

At this point it appears the Minutemen, currently second in the Eastern Division, will open the tourney against West Virginia. Rutgers and either George Washington or Penn State will be the other participant.

Intramural info

Playoff drawings for women's, men's and co-recreational softball were done yesterday and will be posted sometime this morning in the Intramural Office, 215 Boyden.

Playoffs begin today in all three divisions and will be conducted on a single-elimination basis. In the event of rain, contact the Intramural Office for a makeup date.

Just a reminder that all playoff participants will need to show valid UMass student IDs in order to play.

Softball faces URI in key A-10 contests

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts softball team will make-up a previously postponed doubleheader against the University of Rhode Island today at 4 p.m. at Totman Field.

The Minutewomen (21-16 overall and 6-2 in the A-10) have been playing steady ball of late and seem to be ready for the most important stretch of the regular season as they will play six conference games in the next five days.

After today's games UMass will face Rutgers (who the Minutewomen beat in the A-10 tournement) for a doubleheader on Saturday and then will travel to URI for another doubleheader on Sunday. However, Sunday's doubleheader will not count toward Atlantic 10 play.

Today's opponents, the Rams, who have been having their troubles on the road (6-11) will find no comfort at Totman where the Minutewomen have lost only one game this season. That loss came at the hands of nationally-ranked UConn and UMass bounced back to win the second game of the doubleheader.

The Rams, who have but one senior on the team, are led offensively by sophmore Julie Moreau. Moreau is batting .333 with 13 RBIs and a .448 slugging percentage. Following Moreau is fellow sophmore Lisa Payne at a .304 clip.

URI's main pitcher is sophomore Megan O'Neil. O'Neil is currently 8-9 with a 1.94 ERA and has decent control, having walked only 17 batters in 115 innings. But by the same token she does not strikeout many batters either, only 29.

The Minutewomen will look to their main guns (all mentioned here many times before) once again and (weather permitting) should be considered the favorites in this match-up.

UMass reacts to homophobia

Administrators, students respond to incidents

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

Nearly 300 people attended a rally yesterday where administrators and students, reacting to recent campus incidents, spoke out against homophobia on the Student Union steps.

Benjaman Eder, member of the University of Massachusetts Lesbian Bisexual Gay Alliance, started the rally by presenting the 11 demands from the gay, lesbian, bisexual and heterosexual community to University administration.

Dennis Madson, vice chancellor of Student Affairs, said although the University should be a place that embraces all students, it also reflects society's prejudice and discrimination.

The University's goal, Madson said, is to develop a truly multicultural environment. "We are a world community that must learn to appreciate and value differences," he said.

The demands include: a course dealing with issues of oppression at UMass that would be necessary to graduate, an interdisciplinary Program for Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Studies and the establishment of a task force by no later than May 16 to address needs of the community.

The task force would include representatives from the LBGA, the Faculty/Staff Support Group, the Program for Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Concerns, as well as representatives from Housing, the Dean of Students Office, the Vice Chancellor's Office, Academic Affairs and any other appropriate student body.

Madson said UMass must learn to accept all differences and stand up and speak out against intolerance. While learning about oppressed communities has come about "the hard way," it is important for the University to learn from these situation and deal with them, he said.

Chalmani Wigeyesingie, assistant dean of Students Office, said her office has begun to take action against the students who allegedly interrupted Arthur Keene's anthropolgy 206 class last week.

"We're taking an active part against homophobic harassment on this campus," she said. Rene Carew, director of Student Activities Office, said UMass must be a place to embrace all students, not just those students in the main stream. "The only way the gay community has been able to get anyone to listen is to scream out, we have been excluding and discouraging the gay community from getting involved," she said.

Students come to UMass with different levels of social education, she said and it is the university's responsibility to "broaden their view of the world."

"We will get more benefits by including more categories, we have a larger responsibility to reach out and question the status quo," she said. "If we don't change this we have failed as an educational institution."

A small group of students carrying Bibles, American flags and signs saying "Straight Pride" disrupted the rally with chants and shouts interrupting many of the speakers.

Administrators responded positively yesterday to the University's lesbian, bisexual, and gay community's list of 11 demands presented to them at the noon rally protesting recent homophobic acts on campus.

"I am genuinely supportive of the things the [LBGA] is urging," Provost O'Brien said after the rally. "I am anxious to follow up on the objectives of the Alliance."

O'Brien said it is too early to say whether the University will act on all of the demands and said he intends to discuss the list with other administrators.

In a letter sent to the Collegian earlier this week, O'Brien and Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson said the administration is prepared to pursue and take disciplinary action against those responsible for recent homophobic acts.

"Violence and harassment of any kind are not acceptable behavior on this campus," the letter said. "We will actively seek to punish persons identified as performing violence or harassing acts, as well as those found to incite others to such acts."

Included in the LBGA list were calls for action against the students who last week allegedly stormed Professor Arthur Keene's anthropology class and for a clarification of University harassment policy.

Charmain Wijeyesinghe, associate dean of students, described the University's policy as prohibiting harassment of people for their gender, race, religion, sexual orientation or ethnicity.

"We will also pursue the actions taken in Professor Keene's anthropology class," she added.

Nakajima testifies before Regents for more student aid

Trustee says unmet student financial needs have increased to 40 percent

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

With state college presidents pushing for 12 and 20 percent tuition increases for fiscal year 1991, in addition to increased student fees, Student Trustee Eric Nakajima testified before a Board of Regents committee Tuesday to ask for additional financial aid funds.

"For students and their families, careful planning and hard work have been stolen by a public that is more afraid of taxes than a lost generation of uneducated, unskilled and hopeless youth," Nakajima said to the Board.

Saying he thinks his presentation influenced the Regents, Nakajima said, "I wanted to go [to Boston] to make sure financial aid was fought for in a way it really hasn't been in the last couple of years."

He said if the Regents decide to raise tuition at their meeting in early June, they must press the legislature for more financial aid.

"A 15, 12 or even a nine percent increase in tuition is unacceptable if middle income families and the very needy cannot be assured their place in our colleges and universities," Nakajima said.

"There is an argument that students aren't carrying their weight, well that doesn't hold water," he said. "Students and families on financial aid take on 50 percent of the costs of education along with loans. The students are already picking up the slack."

He said it is up to the Regents to advocate a stronger case financial aid to the legislature.

Nakajima told the Regents, whose request for financial aid for fiscal years 1990 and 1991 was $92 and $95 million, the percent of unmet student financial needs has

The Graduate Employee Organization voted last night to ask teaching assistants to pledge to withhold undergraduates' final grades, increasing pressure on campus administrators to reach an agreement with GEO leaders on a union election.

Renee Heberle, GEO co-spokeswoman and a teaching assistant in the political science department, said if GEO members do not approve an agreement for a union

Housing official: Bush knew of HUD scandal

WASHINGTON (AP) — A former federal housing official, who admitted taking bribes, testified yesterday that a federal HUD grant was arranged for a project after its developer appealed to then-Vice President George Bush.

DuBois L. Gilliam, an imprisoned former deputy assistant secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, resumed testimony yesterday about scandals at HUD and described in detail how officials there steered projects to political friends, including members of Congress.

Gilliam, who is serving an 18-month federal prison sentence, was testifying under a court grant of immunity from further prosecution.

Under questioning by Rep. Tom Lantos, D-Calif., chairman of the House panel investigating HUD, Gilliam said HUD officials engaged in a grant swap in order to provide $500,000 requested in 1985 to conduct a feasibility study for a Hispanic trade center in Kansas City, Mo.

Gilliam said that Hector Barrerto, then president of the U.S. Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, sought a HUD grant for the project, but that he first told Barreto it was not qualified under Secretary Samuel R. Pierce Jr.'s discretionary fund for special projects.

He said he got a call that afternoon from Deborah Gore Dean, assistant to Pierce, saying Barreto had met with Bush and that "she had received a call from the vice president's staff asking about the grant, and indicated her desire to try to help get the project funded."

As a result, Gilliam said, he persuaded a Kansas City assistant city manager to provide the grant from the city's Community Development Block Grant funds, provided by HUD, and that in turn he arranged to have a special grant go to Kansas City to replace that money.

increased to 40 percent.

"Before embarking upon a new tuition policy, or tuition increases to stabilize system budget cuts in FY91, the Board of Regents must re-establish the link that exists between financial aid and student charges," he said.

Last month, the Board of Trustees overwhelmingly passed a series of fee increases, totaling $648 for this coming fall semester.

Nakajima said for students who entered the University in the fall of 1987 and will graduate in 1991, the cost of tuition will have risen 60.4 percent in four years.

"I've made tuition and financial aid my most important issue," Nakajima said.

Student biker takes 110 day trek to Brazil

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

After travelling through 12 countries on the back of his motorcycle, University of Massachusetts junior Kibau Claudino reached his destination of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 110 days and 15,000 miles later.

Claudino, a Spanish-Portuguese major, departed from New York on April 24, 1989, returning by ship to UMass on April 25, 1990. An exchange student from Brazil, Claudino has re-applied to finish his last year at the University this fall.

"I'm an adventurous person," Claudino said. "All my teachers from UMass told me I couldn't do it and that I should take a ship from Miami. Now that I've come back, everyone wants to go."

Claudino carried most of his belongings and extra gasoline on the back of the bike. He said his sleeping bag was his own version of a '9 Star Hotel.'

As he travelled from country to country, Claudino said he carried a sign under the license plate of his Honda CB 750K. The sign gave his destination, what country he was leaving and when he left.

"It's what you call my diplomacy," Claudino said. "One guy in Texas who saw the sign gave me $20 because it said 'God Bless America.'"

He said the roads he travelled, particularly in Mexico, sometimes were hard to travel. At the Mexican border in Texas, his passport was not stamped, giving him difficulties proving to Mexican and other Latin American authorities he had entered the country legally.

"The police would look at me like I was a vagabond, but I would tell them that I was a journalist and that I was going to Brazil," Claudino said.

He said he could not travel at night in Mexico because 'banditos' (robbers) sometimes put rocks in the middle of the roads to force drivers to stop so that they can rob them. During his entire trip, the only thing that was stolen from him was a Brazilian flag. He said the border patrol guards would often not let him pass, fearing that he would sell his motorcycle in their country. He said he was offered $6,500 in Columbia and also one pound of cocaine in Peru for his bike.

In El Salvador, he said he obtained temporary permission papers to enter the country apparently from a man wanted by the police. When the authorities stopped him, he had to pay the officer a small fee.

He said Latin American police would often ask him for some money when he was pulled over.

"You have to be really patient and know how to play their game," Claudino said.

For example, he said he told the officer he had 'Salvadorian blood.' The officer asked him on which side of his family.

"I said, 'Neither,' that I was here several years ago, had an accident and needed a blood transfusion." Claudino said. "The guy started laughing and let me go with a small fine."

He said he had expected to spend about $2,500 to reach Brazil, but ended up spending near $4000.

"What I learned in this trip in geography, history, politics, and food would take two years to learn here at UMass," Claudino said. "The poverty in South America and even more in Central America is very bad, but they are very nice people."

GSS: no report endorsement

By MARGARET McATEER
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Senate stated Tuesday night that it sponsored but not fully endorsed the report "UMASS in Crisis! The Corporate Connection" by Marc Kenen, graduate education student and co-spokesman for the Graduate Employee Organization.

The report, published last month, was billed on its front page as being a "A Graduate Student Senate Special Report on the Role of Business in the Dismantling and Restructuring of UMASS." Kenen was hired by the GSS to research and report on the subject.

The clarification of GSS' involvement came after a two-hour debate on a motion proposed by Thomas Niederkorn, Chemical Engineering Department. Niederkorn's motion charged that the report contained inaccuracies and should have been approved by GSS before being published.

Bruce Tull, GSS executive officer, succeeded in amending Niederkorn's motion by a close vote of 17-16. Tull's amendment clarified GSS' affiliation with Kenen's report saying it sponsored but not endorsed it.

Tull's motion to clarify GSS' sponsorship was finally passed with a 28-3 vote.

"I knew this [report] was going to be controversial and some people in the Senate would be angry," Kenen said.

Jacoby Carter, senator from the fisheries department said: "I never expected anything like this to come out without getting a chance to look at it first. As a member of GSS I'm now associated with [the report] but I don't necessarily want to be."

Lisa Markowitz, treasurer, said even though the Executive Committee may have handled the report differently, they still stands by it.

Vice-President Pierre LaLiberte said, "I think a step we missed was bringing the document to GSS and asking for endorsement." He said he also stands by the report.

President Catalina Castillon Dodson said the allegations of inaccuracies in the report will be examined and publically dealt with by the GSS.

The GSS also announced election results for its Executive Committee: Pierre Laliberte, president; Kenen, vice-president; Tull, treasurer and Sarah Lyon, executive officer.

SGA debates $2M budget

By RUSSELL SKELTON
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate started debate last night on the $2 million 1991 budget submitted by the Student Government Budgets Committee by tabling one amendment, rejecting four and passing one.

An amendment to reduce the Campus Center Board of Governors base-level funding from $5 per fee paying undergraduate to $2 was tabled until next week by a vote of 28-17 with four abstentions.

The amendment was presented because of concern that the BOG intended to cut funding for two student agencies, the Craft Shop and Art Gallery.

A statement signed by the four members of the SGA leadership said, "This [cut] is a contradiction of the agreement that was arranged between the Student Senate and the BOG."

One amendment rejected, by a vote of 20-26 with two abstentions, was a motion to cut the appropriation for the Student Activities Office by $7,725.

SGA Treasurer Karen Talbot, speaking against the amendment, said, "The SAO is essential for the running of hundreds of RSOs. Their funding should not be cut."

Student Senator W. Matthew Whiting spoke in support of the amendment. "The SAO is the enemy of us all," he said. "This money is for RSOs not the professional employees at SAO."

Another rejected amendment was one to reduce the funding for the Lesbian Bisexual Gay Alliance by $240.

The vote on this amendment was 13-34 with 11 abstentions.

A representative from the LBGA, Peter Simms, argued against the amendment. "The lesbian bisexual and gay community is growing as more students are coming out of the closet," he said. "The LGBA is one of the few safe places for these people."

Speaking in support of the amendment, Senator Kevin Newnan said, "The reason for this motion is not to attack the LBGA. Money for decorations is inappropriate."

Two amendments to cut funding for the literary and arts magazine Spectrum as well as Nummo News were also rejected.

The only change to the budget that was enacted was an amendment to raise the appropriation of the Republican Club to its 1990 level of $2,230.

Prof: 80s students focus on careers

Sulzer says student activism on the decline

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

The lack of student activism in the 1980s, in contrast to the widespread student movements in the 1960s, demonstrates that students now focus more on their careers and trust the U.S. government, University of Massachusetts professors said yesterday.

Political science professor George Sulzner said the Vietnam War was a national crisis that caused the majority of students to be concerned about the legitimacy of the government's domestic and foreign roles.

"The whole campus was involved in the 60s and 70s because people were getting drafted, like fellow students," Sulzner said.

Winfred Bernard, UMass history professor, said the 60s are difficult to compare to the 80s because the political situations in each decade are fundamentally different.

"During the 60s and 70s, there was much opposition to the government because of the Vietnam war," Bernard said. "Now we are at peace and the prospects of peace have improved since last year."

"In the 1960s, the whole campus was engaged in political actions," Sulzner said. "Students' interest has become a lot more focused on single issues."

He said students are more focused on their coursework and careers than on political activism. Student interest has only become focused on single issues by people with specific interests, Sulzner said.

"There is no longer a large scale general interest about the role of the government," he said. "Students may be more cynical of using the government institution as a vehicle of change."

Sulzner said in the 60s only one or two students identified themselves with the Republican party.

Now he said there is an even split between Democratic and Republican affiliation in his classes.

"UMass is pretty unique compared to the rest of the country for having some students committed to leftist causes,' he added.

UMass prof elected to Academy

Last week Richard S. Stein, University of Massachusetts chemistry professor, was elected to the National Academy of Sciences in Washington in its 127th annual meeting.

Stein, 64, was one of some 60 scientists selected for the Academy.

The Institute has become one of the outstanding polymer study centers in the country and is internationally known for its research in the relationship between the molecular structure of polymers and their physical and mechanical properties.

The National Academy of Sciences is a private organization of distinguished scientists and engineers dedicated to the furtherance of science and its use for the general welfare. Stein, UMass faculty member for 40 years, was instrumental in founding the Polymer Research Institute within the chemistry department in 1961.

Bush implicated in HUD scandal

"In other words, let's make a deal — you do this and I'll do this," Gilliam said.

He did not name the person in the vice president's office. Gilliam said he was unclear about the connection to Bush's office, but said Dean had "indicated something. .about Mr. Barreto going on the vice president's plane."

Lantos, before the meeting, described the case this way: "We will hear testimony from Mr. Gilliam about special projects — how a particular project was funded at the request of 'someone' in the office of the vice president, in order to get a Hispanic leader to accompany the then-vice president on a plane trip to Puerto Rico."

Once a trusted assistant to Pierce during the Reagan administration, Gilliam painted a picture of rampant political abuse at the agency during his initial appearance before the House Governmental Operations subcommittee on employment and housing.

Anti-Semitic graffiti found in library

By PAMELA PERRAULT
Collegian Correspondent

University of Massachusetts police Monday responded to a report of anti-Semitic graffiti found in the stairwell of the 19th floor of the Tower Library.

Anti-Semitic graffiti was found last week on the 20th floor of the Tower Library.

In other police reports:

LARCENY

- A student reported Monday the theft of his knapsack containing a camera, calculator, and other personal items from the Hampshire Dining Commons. The items were valued at $200.
- A man reported Monday that a window of his vehicle was smashed and the radar detector was stolen while parked in E lot by the stadium. Damages were estimated at $235.

VANDALISM

- A woman reported Monday that a window of her vehicle was smashed while parked in E lot by the stadium. Damages estimated at $150.
- A patrol officer discovered Tuesday a vehicle with a smashed windshield in the Fraternity/Sorority Park parking lot.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted

Crisis not one-sided

It is difficult to describe the feelings the Jewish community has faced recently, or the tension that grows everyday.

For many of us in the community, we have always known of the existence of Israel, our homeland, and its importance to us. And we also are aware of the battles that were fought and the blood that was shed in order to keep it from being destroyed.

Daniel Marks Cohen

We have been taught of the anti-Semitism and hatred in all its forms that would have prevented the creation of a Jewish homeland, and if possible, destroyed the Jews altogether.

We have witnessed progroms (mob-like attacks on Jewish villages, occurring in Eastern Europe), papers, books, and even whole governments, blaming the problems of the world on the Jews.

Now Israel has, in the eyes of many, become its own enemy. Organizations that were once calling for total destruction of the Jewish people now appear to be calling for peace.

Comparisons are being made between Israel and the conflict over the Palestinian state and other nations with policies of discrimination and hatred. We see and hear of young children dying from bullets and rocks.

Issues arise that are a contradiction of what we believe Israel represents, like investments in the Republic of South Africa (RSA). Or the Palestinian call for a homeland, a desire which we deeply understand since we, too, possess that desire.

The Palestinian Liberation Organization has been a source of great apprehension since the conception of Israel, and now they seem to be asking for freedom, not annihilation.

Some people are calling for divestment from Israel, and when Jews rally against this, we are called racists. We do not support the investments Israel has made in apartheid, yet we cannot and will not walk away from our homeland.

It is particularly frustrating because Israel is not the only country to invest in the RSA. America and Japan have also invested heavily in it. Not that this excuses Israel from blame.

We are not proud of these investments RSA. It has been said that the RSA is totally funded by Israel, and that is ridiculous.

Investment in the RSA is wrong, but Israel should not take the blame for other nations as well. We do not wish to interfere with the creation of a homeland for the Palestinians, yet we are concerned that giving up land for it and allowing it to progress might lead to Israel's destruction.

And now we are being called upon to negotiate. I harbor no hatred for the Palestinian struggle, and have yet to meet a single Jew who does. We do fear for Israel's existence and will fight.

This crisis is not one-sided, with the Jews on one side and the Palestinians on the other. It is ripping the Jewish community apart, and this frightens us even more.

Try to understand the position of many Jews. We love Israel, but are fearful for its life. The Holocaust destroyed six million of our people, not to mention an additional six million other non-Jews. Perhaps if a homeland had already existed, Jews would have had a safe refuge and such an atrocity might not have occurred.

As long as Israel exists, we can survive and keep another Holocaust at bay. We are hesitant to be openly critical of certain policies of our country for without it we fear for our lives.

Let's send the message that we want to try to reach an agreement without violence or pain. It is the only way.

Class disruption condemned

On Tuesday, April 24, Professor Arthur Keene's Anthropology 206, "Culture Through Film," class was disrupted by a group of about 10 to 15 men. The incident was obviously a homophobic one intended to intimidate the students and the professor.

We live in a community where we should be allowed to develop our own beliefs without the fear of being chastised because of what we choose to learn.

The classroom is a place where we can open our minds up to new ways of thinking and viewing the world. It is essential that students and professors can openly communicate their thoughts and ideas. Without this freedom we will not be able to gain knowledge entitled to us as conscious citizens.

This incident poses a direct threat to the freedom of thought and expression which is stimulated in a classroom setting.

We condemn this incident and expect the administration to take immediate action against all individuals involved.

Running in recycling circles

It all began innocently with my desk.

The people who know me have never confused me with Felix Unger. My mother says she doesn't bother to go in my bedroom any more — it's beyond hope.

I'm not exactly a slob. Maybe a litle unorganized? That's a fair assessment.

Jim Clark

Let's face it. I've never had any grand illusion that I am writing for the New York Times. To be truthful, my desk is slightly less cluttered than that of Prof. Cosmo P. Fishhawk, he of "Shoe" comic strip fame.

But every once in a blue moon, I get this silly desire to clean my workspace — usually when it gets to the point that I'm looking for something valuable which has been swallowed up by my desk that acts so much like that hideous plant in Little Shop of Horrors.

I tried the other night, but unlike Sarah Cynthia Sylvia Stout, I couldn't take the garbage out.

Certain people wouldn't let me.

So here, on line 19 of diatribe, do I get to my latest source of duress:

Recycling.

You see the cutesy little messages scattered throughout this fine journal of college life. In those tough-angle spots that used to be occupied by Celery, we are now being coaxed into recycling this newspaper.

In war times, recycling was a necessity in order to keep up with the demand on supplies overseas. In today's world, it's the matter of environmentally-conscious people screaming that Mother Earth is going to hell in a bowling ball bag faster than the Massachusetts deficit is piling up.

Sorry, folks. I'd love to help out, but right now I'm overwhelmed.

It started out with soda cans and bottles. I'll quickly admit, nothing is more unsightly than a roadside that is strewn with litter. Believe me, the first time I drove through Queens on the Long Island Expressway, I almost puked.

It's not that part of the recycling scheme that has me worried. My problem is that nothing seems simple any more.

Been to the dump . . . er, town landfill, lately? When I was a kid, we would put our garbage in front of the house every Tuesday and it would get picked up. No problem.

Now we have to be chemical analysts, sifting through things and tossing our waste into 1,000,006 different categories.

Go to the landfill, and you see the evidence. One pile for tires, one pile for snow tires, one pile for tires from 1974 Ford Pintos, one pile for brown glass, green glass, metal, plastic, shirts ruined by spaghetti stains . . .

On and on and on. I'm getting dizzy.

I change the oil in my car. Wanna get rid of the old stuff. Can't throw it away. Gotta find someone who'll take it off my hands. (What do they do with it, by the way?)

Of course, we could solve our dilemma so easily if we had any brains. Hey, let's burn it. Then our landfills won't fill up anymore.

Oh, can't do that. The Department of Environmental Quality Engineering says that smoke is bad. Smog, pollutants, greenhouse effect. Besides, that would still be wasting a lot of trees (it's not like they'll grow back, or anything like that).

Recycling isn't a bad idea. But like everything else in the world, it has its drawbacks. If there was a simple answer, I'd be all for it.

Of course, I'm being naive, maybe even lazy. I understand that. So don't even bother writing your letters to complain. It would only waste more paper and complicate the problem.

Repulsed by regurgitation

There is vomit on my window.

Last Sunday, after I returned from the shower, my roommate Susan let out a small scream.

"There is vomit on the window," she said.

Great. Wonderful. Fantastic.

The weather finally starts to be warm, and we can finally leave the windows open at night. What do we get?

Vomit on the window.

Gayle Long

These people, the ones that live above us, have finally pushed us too far. We have grown accustomed to their incessant parties, the nights before we have exams or early classes. We have learned to pull the blankets and pillows up around our ears and try to keep the noise out.

But now they have let their partying affect our lives throughout the week. And we are sick of it.

Let me explain the grotesqueness of this particular brand of vomit.

I could just say this — it was Italian Night at the Dining Commons. But I won't.

I'll also tell you that they served spaghetti and manicotti. And even though the food at the D.C. is not too appealing when you first get it, let me tell you that the second, third, fourth and fifth time seeing it, after being semi-digested, is no particular treat, either.

The floor above me has been notorious this past semester for imposing their desire to get 'absolutely hammered' upon everybody in the building.

They have thrown a couch (which belonged to the University) off their balcony. They upset the cleaning lady every Monday when she comes in to clean up their rather raw-looking, regurgitated bathrooms.

They have yuked over the edge of the balcony, which ultimately ends up on my floor's balcony. And besides this rather personal attack on our window, some rather nasty person (for want of another, more fitting word) urinated out of their window onto a window of another room on my floor.

In short, they care nothing for the people on other floors in the building.

The vomit, at the time of this writing, is still on our window. Susan has gone upstairs many times to try and get them to clean it off. One night I was with her, and we encountered not our "neighbors to the north," but rather their next-door-neighbors. But Susan wanted to leave them a message.

"Please tell them that we would really like the vomit off our window," was all she had to say.

Considering the revolting mass of human refuse which gives our room the smell of a virtual cesspool or septic tank — we believe that we have every right to ask that they take what is rightfully theirs and put it somewhere we don't have to look at it.

Think about if there were vomit on your window. I doubt that you'd open your arms and embrace its coming like a new-found friend.

But nonethelesss, the vomit is still there. I wonder if they are reading this. Because it is not funny.

We should not have to clean our window. As Susan says, "I don't care if they have to scale the building, as long as they get it off." She is right.

If these imbeciles want to puke their way to oblivion, hey, it's their life.

But I don't. Susan doesn't. The other people on my floor don't either.

Why don't they just grow up?

Mirror of self-reflection shines on past college years

You stare into the silvery mirror, a face shines back at you like some wondrous mystery dripping with clues yet bearing no solution. You ask that reflection who it is, an endless pondering. It is you. The unchangeable and majestic. A soul. The Watcher.

Josh Galitsky

Some of you can easily grasp the oddness of my meditative message. You have taken part in this self-dialogue numberless times. Perhaps others of you never gaze long enough but to brush your hair or examine some facial flaw. Don't read on nonthinkers. This will make no sense to you.

We all have in common, the great illusion, the glistening reality called life. Memories create themselves from dust and pass through us swiftly. We retain much of their magic, sanctity and richness. In the darkness and radiance of our lives, what we all jointly possess and behold, is the infinite cycle of change.

Graduation. Warm, optimistic ceremony under a laughing sky. The end of a life era. A piece, a sliver of time holding dreams unfinished, territory unexplored. This is indeed a time for reflection.

Who are you? Who am I? What are we leaving behind as our mark and taking with us as our reward? I have some clues but no solutions.

I have danced, run and crawled upon the earth of this campus for five complex years. Identical days have blended into enduring repetition yet a taste of the unique touches each one. I have learned and forgotten, dreamed and awakened, hated and loved.

It is an almost odd understanding of death somehow. I am living today, aware of my eventual absence. People and pathways hold golden new meaning as they slip through my fingers.

How will I be remembered as I pass on to a different life? What have I sketched into the lives of others? How will they define me when my presence is but a ghost?

I think people will say much about me. Some will claim I had humor in my veins, funny and witty, perhaps slightly insane. Others will say I was blatantly serious, analyzing the color of the sky until I collapsed from exhaustion.

Some will say that I cared about people deeply, desperate to share my knowledge or foolishness, to paint a smile on a friend or mankind. Others will denounce that I had no time for them. I was impatient, hot-tempered, aloof.

Still more will proclaim that I was oddly different than most, oh unexplainable me. They will swear that my sum total was unlike anything they've ever known.

The people closest to me, my lifeblood, would probably declare that I was a troubled, jovial poet who lives to suck the marrow out of life but isn't quite sure how to do it.

Some will say I glowed of romantic sensitivity, passionate understanding and strange enlightenment. Others will say I'm a frightened little boy, juggling the world with fear and fantasy, with much hope but without a plan.

Oh tragic woe that some people never took the time to know me, to see beyond the shell of my skin. But I never took the time to know you either. Perhaps we will someday both, sense the sting of that similar regret.

I will probably always feel that I hurt one person too many and helped one person too few. But I know, with true certainty, that I have tasted more than enough sweetness here, shared more than enough laughter and experienced more than enough love.

Oh safe haven that has kept me warm, thank you. Oh familiar faces that endure in my memories, I will carry you with me, good and bad. Oh friends who have seen my soul, for you there is forever a home in my heart.

Oh graduates, my comrades. What do you see when you stare into the silvery mirror?

Support efforts to punish intolerance

Several incidents of homophobia have occurred on our campus recently. Gay students have been threatened, intimidated and harasssed, and a class has been disrupted.

Behavior such as this has no place on our campus. We will not tolerate acts of homophobia, racism, sexism, anti-Semitism and other forms of oppression.

The University is dedicated to the ideals of access, equality and opportunity for all people.

In a community which strives to recognize and respect the freedom and dignity of every human being, acts of intolerance hurt all of us, not just the individuals who are the targets of the actual acts.

We will actively seek to punish persons identified as performing violent or harassing acts, as well as those found to incite others to such acts.

We will pursue punishment through both the campus disciplinary system and the court system, as appropriate.

It takes active support from all of us to make this a better place to live, study and work.

We must work together to meet one of our campus' major goals of achieving a multicultural campus.

Thank you for your assistance in this effort.

Calling genocide a lie appalling

In response "Armenian genocide exaggerated" (Melisa Canli, April 30), I would like to express my outrage and to clear up some facts.

She begins by quoting two events, the assassination of a Turkish diplomat in 1973 and the bombing of a Turkish-owned travel agency in 1983. She claims that we never hear about such events when in fact these occurrences have been highly publicized in the media in the past.

She continues by asking why Armenians are portrayed as victims comparable to Jews in the Holocaust. The Armenian genocide was a precedent for Hitler to follow a plan to exterminate an entire nation of people. In Hitler's view, if genocide happened before and nothing was done, why couldn't it happen again?

She puts the word "genocide" in quotations, implying that this is not a proven fact even when it has been proven by many eyewitness accounts. Many of these accounts were from non-Armenian sources such as U.S. Ambassador to Turkey Henry Morgenthau.

Ms. Canli uses the word "alleged" in her article and states that the genocide in fact did not happen. The word 'alleged' cannot be used for this and is calling the entire world a liar. Pick up any issue of the New York Times from 1915 and it tells of the horrible massacre that was occurring in Turkey.

Our ancestors did not all get together and decide to have an identical nightmare of catastrophic proportions. The thought of anyone calling the genocide a lie is purely appalling.

Ms. Canli states that "Armenian" sources claimed only 600,000 Armenians had been killed. Who are these Armenian sources I'd like to know? Armenian sources would not underestimate such a large nunmber of casualties. The number of casualties is accurate at 1.5 million killed. We Armenians do not claim that number for sympathy but rather as truth.

Ms. Canli goes on to state that "Turks were killed too and in fact many more Turks died than Armenians." The reason for this was that Turkey was directly involved in the war. Many died as war casualties but Armenians were not involved in the same capacity in the war effort.

There is no "false impression" that Turkey is "stonewalling" the facts, especially when there is proof that millions of Turkish dollars are spent in changing the history books to exclude the fact that the Armenian genocide occurred.

Turkey not admitting to the Armenian genocide is comparable to Germany not admitting to the Holocaust.

The UMass Armenian Club knows the other side of the historical coin: The Ottoman Empire tried to eliminate the Armenians residing in Turkey and used World War I as their cover. We haven't ignored that, and maybe you shouldn't either.

Perspectives on Middle East vary with factual information

The editorial "Media does not reveal inhumane conditions in Israel" (April 30, Micah Nassar) highlights the most important reason why the status quo in the Middle East is unacceptable: people are suffering.

Also highlighted within this column is one of the most important reasons why the status quo continues: the pervasive (and well-documented) belief that Israel is a temporary aberration awaiting eradication. Nassar states that, "After reaching Gaza City. . . I knew Israel was a state of temporary abhorrence," indicating that not only are the conditions in the West Bank and Gaza Strip unacceptable, but that the entire existence of Israel as a state is unacceptable. This type of belief has, not surprisingly, caused Israel to fear making any concessions.

Nassar draws upon a mixture of personal experience and factual information to create a picture of the situation in the Middle East. Neither the personal experience nor the factual information need be debated. But the attitude that one person's experience, and one person's choice of facts, can be presented as the complete and only truth, does need to be questioned.

Naturally, there were many facts which Nassar left out: The West Bank was captured from Jordan after Israel was attacked by a coalition of Arab states whose sole purpose was Israel's destruction, and that Jordan actually refused to accept Israel's attempts to return the territory after the war was over. The Sinai desert, which was captured from Egypt during the same war, was able to be returned because Egypt was sincere in it's willingness to negotiate for peace; and that Israeli citizens are themselves deeply divided regarding government policy towards the West Bank and Gaza Strip (etc.).

The situation and the history of the Middle East is complex, and to claim a monopoly on the truth regarding that situation is pure arrogance. After reading different perspectives on the Middle East, it became apparent to me that no one perspective was wholly more truthful, or more "right," than any other.

Obviously, by choosing a different set of facts, I could create an argument very different, yet still be logical, truthful and emotionally persuasive.

True reasons behind co-rec softball

In a recent editorial, "Battle of the co-rec sexists" (Meredith O'Brien, May 1) expressed the sexist nature of co-rec softball. I feel that it is my responsibility as an avid intramural player as well as an official to clarify the true reasons behind the larger co-rec softball.

If she is so intent on playing with a regular-sized softball with both males and females, it would be to her benefit to sign up a team in the fall when there is co-ed softball.

The difference between co-ed and co-rec is that co-ed uses the traditional ball while co-rec uses the enlarged version. So contrary to her belief, she can enjoy a "fair and challenging game" even though she is a woman.

Co-rec softball was created as a less competitive version of the traditional game. It is an alternative to the more fierce and high-strung atmosphere of the men's and women's leagues.

Overall, her case is weak at best. As she stated herself, intramurals were created for those who are not the best to participate in a game they love so much. The intramural programs more than offer you that opportunity. The co-directors include both a male and a female. They do their best to create a fun, yet competitive, environment in almost every sport imaginable.

It is a shame that their great efforts, as well as those of the students who help run the program, are being undermined by an uneducated, unsubstantiated opinion.

Co-rec softball is far from sexist. It is sad that sexism is dragged into the realm of intramural athletics, the last place I would expect it to pop up.

I would like to advise those who dare to make such drastic claims to do a little more research before putting it into print.

Index policies and purpose explained

The Index yearbook exists here through the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF), but it is not an SATF account. It is a totally non-profit organization.

We receive all of our money from seniors who get their pictures taken, those who buy yearbooks and advertisements. We get indirect help from the SATF — it provides us with office space and would aid us if we went into deficit. But we do not get any help with revenue.

The University receives the interest from the money in our account. In no way is the Index supported monetarily by SATF.

It does not state anywhere in our constitution that seniors who do not pay $5 to get their senior pictures taken will not be listed in the book. This was a staff decision.

No one tells WMUA what music to play or tells the Collegian exactly what to print on its pages. We made a decision not to include the seniors who did not get their pictures taken because people looking through a yearbook do not want to see approximately 20 pages of names listed.

We would rather spend our money on things that are more interesting to those who do purchase a yearbook. It is also financially impossible to insert the 20 pages needed to list the names of seniors who are not pictured in the yearbook.

One of the purposes of a yearbook is to provide a "memento to our glorious college years." However, it is our responsibility as a yearbook staff to balance the expectations of the student body with the realities of producing a yearbook.

It must also be kept in mind that we are a student-run organization that is struggling with the apathy of those students who do not want to take the time to get their senior pictures taken and do not have enough pride in the University to buy a yearbook.

It is unfortunate that those who are perhaps uncomfortable having their picture taken must be affected by this apathy. It is also unfortunate that the Index has to be blamed for the faults of some apathetic graduates of the class of 1990.

election by the next membership meeting on May 17, a vote will be taken on whether to withhold grades.

"The administration never moves until we do actions," she said. "This is a means by which the membership feels they can pressure the administration to negotiate meaningfully."

"The administration could go on and on," she said, noting that if the GEO did not pressure the administrators to reach an agreement soon, "we might as well prop dummies up in the board room."

If the grade withholding is approved, Heberle said teaching assistants will give their grades to the GEO Assembly before May 29, with the exception of grades for graduating seniors, transfer students, and students whose bank loans are dependent upon receipt of transcripts.

If grades are withheld, Heberle said the GEO will determine when its negotiating committee has achieved a 'reasonably satisfactory' agreement with the administration concerning an election at the earliest date.

At such time, Heberle said GEO members will deliver the grades held in escrow to the administration.

ARTS & LIVING

Death is a growth industry in the jazz scene

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Staff

Valley Jazz

Jazz musicians are dying these days with unfortunate regularity. Within the last year, roughly half a dozen well-known names appeared in the jazz obits, the most recent ones being vocalist Sarah Vaughan and saxophonist Dexter Gordon. It is time to face the most depressing fact of all: death is probably the biggest growth industry in jazz today. Like so many vultures, the powers that be, seize upon the death of yet another artist as an opportunity for their own advancement.

For record companies, death is an opportunity to put out reissues, lavishly-annotated anthologies and previously-unreleased marginalia. These are sure-fire money-makers and they cost very little to produce. Like the other reissues currently flooding the market, these releases undercut the sales of albums of newly-recorded work.

For disc jockeys, death is an opportunity to seize the moment and deliver yet another sanctimonious eulogy to the Dear Departed. I just couldn't believe how many disc jockeys I heard solemnly mentioning that Dexter Gordon died "Round Midnight" (referring to the 1987 film in which Gordon starred). Few people had even heard of drummer Freddie Waits until he passed away last year.

Most ridiculous of all, death means instant, guaranteed entry into Downbeat magazine's Hall of Fame. Billie Holiday said it best: "You're nobody until you're dead, and then you're the greatest." So it was with her, too.

This is nothing new, of course; death has done wonders for the reputations of all kinds of artists in the Western world for a long time. The problem is that, with more and more jazz musicians dying, the matter is getting out of hand; it went over the top when Thelonious Monk passed away several years ago. Worse, death-mongering is not compatible with the African (non-Western) heritage of jazz, as it is with Western art forms such as classical music. Jazz is a performer's medium; its success depends on the creativity and individuality of the artist as well as that ever-elusive moment of creation. It is impossible (right now, at least) to pin down the in-the-moment aspects of jazz in the same way that a classical composer's work is represented by a score.

The death of a jazz artist causes his or her contribution to be frozen in time and hung up on a wall for all to study and admire, like a painting in a museum. The musicians who are creating today are as much a part of the jazz tradition as those who have passed on; the current death-mongering emphasizes the dead part of the tradition at the expense of the living. This may work for classical music, but it just doesn't work for jazz.

There are several unfortunate results of this. One is that it leads young musicians to believe that they must learn every Charlie Parker lick (for example) before they may make their own contributions. They expend lots of effort trying to learn bebop — which is very difficult — rather than trying to find their own musical voices, and they are ultimately deluded into thinking that slavish emulation of past masters equals creativity.

The critical corner of the jazz world is led into making the same mistake: those who "dot Parker's i's and cross Dizzy's t's" (as critic Gene Santoro put it when defending Miles Davis' music recently) are labeled innovators, while the real innovators' contributions are discounted.

Of course we should be sad whenever a great musician dies. But people should realize that their death does not "magnify and sanctify" the importance of the contributions they have made from which today's musicians can learn. And instead of spending time mourning the dead with ulterior motives, people should feel all the more reason to work toward giving today's musicians a more encouraging environment in which to flourish, so that they don't die (biologically or creatively) at as early an age as many of the older musicians did.

And if I hear any more Dexter Gordon or Sarah Vaughan tributes on the radio, I'll throw up.

Shocked gives gutsy, energetic performance

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

Michelle Shocked
John M. Greene Hall
Tuesday, May 1

Michelle Shocked is having fun, and it's good to see.

After conquering shock treatments, psychiatric care from people who were convinced she was crazy, homelessness and several arrests, Shocked was justly a very angry young woman who expressed her views with her voice and guitar.

The results were the brilliantly poignant Texas Campfire Tapes and more commercially successful Short Sharp Shocked, albums which spun tales of her childhood and injustices of our scummy capitalistic society.

But as Michelle so eloquently stated, all this anger and fighting caused her one big pain in her derierre. So she went to her doctor, who prescribed dancing to "air it out; let the problem breathe."

Hence came Captain Swing, a fun album with a big band sound, and with it came the new Michelle Shocked. Boastful and jubilant onstage, the Captain kept the capacity crowd swinging, laughing and having an all-around good time.

Although her all-male backing band had big hair and trendy clothes, they were fine musicians who worked well with their captain.

"Memories of East Texas" offered the evening's loveliest moment. Shocked quietly sang the reflections of her childhood years, as the crowd sat, swayed and quietly sang the simple chorus. It felt as if we were all sitting around an open campfire.

But the show's highlight was Shocked's a capella ballad "Penny Evans," about a woman with two children whose husband was killed in Vietnam. Although Penny is poor, when she receives her compensation check from the military every month, she "mails the damn thing back." As is the case with most Shocked songs, the story is simple and powerful.

This was followed by a mandolin duet between Shocked and her father, an ordinary looking guy that proved to be one hell of a finger plucker.

■ men's lacrosse stuns Brown

Codignotto (five goals, two assists), junior attack Jim McAleavey and senior midfielder Jamie Bergan had the Gorillas on their way.

Sean Stalfort's bounce shot past junior goalie Ted Kellerman (19 saves) stopped the run briefly, but that's when the Gorillas decided to bid the Bruins adieu, scoring six straight.

Senior attack Scott Hiller (three goals, two assists) and junior midfielder Rich Senatore each banged home a pair, sandwiched around a single tally by senior midfielder Tim Soudan (four goals, three assists) to push UM to an 8-2 lead after one quarter.

The onslaught didn't stop in the second quarter, the lead growing to as much as eight goals at two different points. Soudan, Codignotto and Hiller swelled the lead to 11-3, and Codignotto countered a goal by Andrew Towers (three goals, two assists) to make it 12-4 with 8:47 still left in the half.

"The first two quarters we played to our potential," said senior defensive midfielder Hugh O'Callaghan. "We always have the intensity, but if we don't make stupid mistakes we're one of the best teams in the country."

The Gorillas were having a ball, making it look easy against the Bruins. But Brown coach Dom Starsia, who was beside himself as UM's Vinny D'Angelo was dominating faceoffs, went with Towers on the draws and Brown started to control. Four straight goals sliced it to 12-8 before Soudan launched a rocket late in the half to give the Gorillas a 13-8 lead at intermission.

Soudan's goal came after Garber called for a stick check on Bruin defender Carter Trudel. The officials examined the stick and declared it illegal, granting the Gorillas a three-minute, non-releasable penalty.

Despite carrying that momentum into the second half, the Bruins got the first tally from Rich Tuohey (four goals). But before they got any silly thoughts of rallying, UMass rattled off five straight goals to end the third quarter, humbling the home folks.

Soudan let rip another of his vicious shots, beating a beleaguered Brown goalie Steven Ayers under the crossbar. Codignotto and McAleavey added goals and defenders Matt Garber and O'Callaghan joined the fun as UMass was flying after three, 18-9.

UMass maintained its advantage in the early stages of the fourth quarter. Soudan made a great play by winning a faceoff, dodging three defenders, rolling on the ground and still holding on to the ball before feeding McAleavey for a bunny.

Starsia, smelling a rat and maybe seeking for revenge, called for a check of Soudan's stick. But nothing was awry. It was that kind of night, everything seemingly going UM's way.

After Frank Pepe's bouncer with 7:47 to play made it 21-12, Brown made its big move. However, time ran short and so did the comeback, UMass holding on in the end.

"I kept trying to keep them in the game," Garber said, hoping to divert thoughts of the 300th victory. "This team is famous for going out to lunch."

Garber said he reminded them of three seasons ago, when in the NCAA playoffs UMass thought it had wrapped up a win over Penn before the Quakers scored three times in 48 seconds to steal the party.

There was no chance of that happening last night. The Gorillas played as inspired as they have in a long while.

And if they can bottle that formula for a couple of weeks, there could be several more happy moments similar to last night.

Gorilla Grumblings: If the rumors that circulated last night were true, it was a fine day all-around for the Garber family. Word has it son Ted Garber's University of New Hampshire team stunned Harvard.

UMass coach Dick Garber had plenty of reason to smile last night. He picked up his 300th career coaching victory as his Gorillas stormed past Brown, 21-18 in Providence, R.I.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Maintain an open mind and you will learn a lot. Be willing to take a risk on a long shot. An older person expresses appreciation in a meaningful way. Keep up on current affairs.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Free yourself from time-consuming activities that are not helping you or anyone else. Look for alternatives when you run into roadblocks. Be subtle when approaching a loved one about a sensitive matter.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A request for financial help will receive serious consideration. In the meantime, look for other options. Refuse to make a final decision until you receive all the information you are entitled to.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Higher-ups are more receptive to your ideas today. A bonus is possible. Be honest with someone who cares a great deal for you. Pool your financial resources with trustworthy people.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Expressions of understanding are not enough. Insist on knowing the truth. You can reverse an unfavorable ruling. Keep financial transactions private. An innovative idea will boost business profits.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An unexpected change in plan creates excitement at your place of employment. Review past successes and failures before deciding what to do next in your career. Experts suggest ways to save money.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Do not trade off long-term goals for short-term profits. Long-distance phone calls can save the cost of business trips. You discover hidden depths within yourself. Use your talents wisely.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Keep pushing yourself to accomplish more. Ease into a new exercise-and-diet program. Philosophical questions will be answered by those who have had more experience. Trust your own instincts.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Reaching a secret agreement with someone who works behind the scenes is a big advantage. Postpone travel and tend to health needs. Encourage mate to join you in getting more exercise.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Friends can provide useful information. A long-distance telephone call brightens your day. Give an older person more tender loving care. Use poetry to express your feelings.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Use the phone to generate business at a distance. Turn a hobby into a profitable full-time occupation. Be discreet, but find a way to help a friend in need. Romance may be frustrating.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Inspiration comes easily today. Ignore a former friend who is spreading false rumors. A romantic reconciliation makes your spirits soar! Show an older family member understanding.

Field notes: West Virginia (12-4) has clinched a spot in the upcoming A-10 Tournament. George Wahington (9-3) and Penn State (6-6) are battling it out for second place, the two teams square off against one another this weekend at GW for four games.

If GW and West Virginia tie for first, West Virginia will be the first place team because they beat GW three out of four times. The Minutemen play the first place team in the Western Division in the first round of the playoffs.

■ Garber wins 300th

off a furious rally, reality set in.

"People were asking me what I thought about winning 300. I said, 'If I do, I'm a helluva coach. If I don't, I'm a bum, because I only won 299.' But it's a neat record to have."

At game's end, the team boosted Garber on their shoulders as fans and supporters swarmed the field. Later on, team members revealed t-shirts which read "Happy 300th, Goose (Garber's nickmane)" on the front, and "Brown Went Down" on the back.

Asked to reflect on his 36-year, 300-win career, Garber said, "I didn't do anything. All I did was live a long time."

Maybe like Carl Yastrzemski, Garber's mark has been enhanced by his long stay in the coaching ranks. But there is no disputing his record of success — the first coach ever to win 300 games as a college lacrosse coach.

"Brown went down"; Garber wins 300th

Offense clicks as Gorillas roll, 21-18

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — If the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team played every moment like it did in the first half last night, it may never lose again.

The Gorillas played with the kind of intensity and emotion that great teams possess. And Brown University could do nothing but stand around and watch as the Gorillas dominated, jumping out to a huge lead and then holding on for a 21-18 win last night at Stevenson Field.

The incentive behind the performance was two-fold: UMass knew that a victory against the fourth-ranked Bruins was its only ticket to a possible postseason berth. Of equal importance, it was maybe the last chance to get UMass coach Dick Garber his 300th career victory (see accompanying story).

"I think this ought to do it for us," Garber said, regarding his team's postseason chances.

Whatever the case, UMass (10-3, ranked 11th nationally) put on a phenomenal display at times, showing signs of a team that is capable of making some postseason noise.

The fact that UMass played on a similar level against Rutgers Saturday night could be proof positive that the team is peaking at the right time.

Then again, at times the Gorillas saw their weaknesses show through, sore spots that have popped up on a few occasions this season. But on this night, the positives far outweighed anything negative that may have happened.

Scott Hiller and the UMass offense caught fire last night, scorching Brown University, 21-18 in Providence, R.I.

"We were due," said senior attack Rob Codignotto. "What a time to pull it out of the hat."

While it was just as much trying to avoid any more losses, UMass desperately needed to prove its worth by beating a nationally-recognized team. And for most of last night's game, the Gorillas beat Brown senseless.

"We came out smoking in the first half," Garber said.

It didn't look encouraging when Darren Lowe converted a Sam Jackson pass just 47 seconds into the contest for a quick Brown lead. But consecutive goals by

Milestone victory for retiring coach

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — Eight lacrosse coaches had won 300 career games before last night.

But University of Massachusetts coach Dick Garber, who became the ninth with his team's 21-18 victory over Brown University, is the first ever to win 300 as strictly a college coach.

In a way, it came down to the wire. With Garber retiring after this season, there was a lot of question whether he would reach the milestone.

But when the meeting with Brown (which was rained out from its original April 4 date) was rescheduled for last night, it gave the Gorillas some hope of getting the big win for their coach.

Using that as their incentive, the Gorillas took it to the fourth-ranked Bruins last night.

"He tried to downplay it in practice, using that reverse psychology," said senior defensive midfielder Hugh O'Callaghan.

But the idea of getting the 300th win for Garber has been etched in the players' minds since the start of the season. Letting him go out with 299 would have been rough to swallow.

"When we lost to Harvard and Yale, I didn't think it was probable," Garber said.

Even given the chance to beat Brown, some didn't think the Gorillas would be able to pull it off. But when UMass overwhelmed the Bruins at the start and fought

Softball sweeps past URI

Minutewomen clinch berth in A-10 tournament at Totman

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Sraff

Maybe the University of Massachusetts softball team is so good that they can win games simple by turning it on and off. Or maybe, sometimes, they're just plain lucky.

"We were lucky," said coach Elaine Sortino after her Minutewomen (23-16) had swept the University of Rhode Island in a doubleheader, 1-0 and 3-2.

The first game saw Holly Aprile (16-9) pitch a masterpiece, carring a perfect game until the number nine hitter poked a grounder up the middle with two outs in the sixth.

UMass scored the lone run of the first game in the bottom of the sixth as Cherie DellAnno led off with a single and was moved over to second on a sacrifice bunt by Chris Collins.

With two outs and DellAnno still at second, freshmen Sherri Kuchinskas (3 for 3, 1 double, 1 RBI) came through with her third hit of the day, allowing DellAnno to score.

The Minutewomen would survive a WRam (that's really their name) scare in the top of the seventh as their top batter, Julie Moreau, walked with one out and then sacrificed over to second by Kathy Tewey. With the runner in scoring position Sue Hubin singled to right.

With Moreau heading to third, the WRam third base coach put up the stop sign, bringing up Ellen Dreska with runners at the corners and to out.

Dreska lined a shot up the middle that Aprile was only able to deflect. Fortunately for the Minutewomen it was tipped over to second base where Jen Miller scooped it up and shuffled it over to first to end the game, 1-0.

The second game proved to be more exciting, if even sometimes exasperating, then the first.

UMass wasted no time getting on the board in this one as Aprile, who entered the game with her batting average at a nosebleeding .420, doubled to lead off and then was moved over to third on a single by Collins.

With two outs and runners still at the corners, Kuchinskas hit what appeared to be a inning ending ground ball to short, but the URI shortstop threw the ball away, Aprile scoring on the play.

The score would stay at 1-0 until the top of the sixth, this is where the WRams would catch a few breaks of their own.

Two UMass errors would put runners at second and third with nobody out. Aprile, who replaced Claffey in the fourth, got a big out when she struck out Moreau, but another UMass error allowed the tying run to score and the go-ahead run scored on a single (the only hit of the inning) by Hubin.

The Minutewomen had a opportunity to score in the bottom of the inning as Kuchinskas had yet another hit and was moved over to third on a single by Mary Duff, but where left stranded.

With one out in the bottom of the seventh, Aprile beat out an infield single and would go to second as the umps called an illegal pitch. DellAnno walked to put runners at first and second and Collins singled up the middle.

On the Collin's single Aprile moved to third and would have stayed put, had the ball not skipped past the catcher on the throw in and had the URI pitcher been backing up the play. But the Totman gods smiled upon the Minutewomen and Aprile scored easily.

DellAnno scored the winning run on a suicide-squeeze by Miller.

Amherst treks across town to battle UM

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

After being fogged out in Maine, the University of Massachusetts baseball team returns home this afternoon for a game with Amherst College (3 p.m.).

After playing the number one team in New England (Maine), Amherst College is a step down in competition. The Minutemen have played and beaten some of the top teams in New England, Amherst College has not. In fact, Amherst College is a Division III school, which probably should not even be on the UMass schedule. But they are.

Let's not forget that the UMass basketball team was beaten by a Division II school (Lowell) earlier this season. So while the Minutemen should defeat the Lord Jeffs, the possibility still exists that Amherst may win.

"Amherst is a good team, they've had a good year," said UMass coach Mike Stone. "They'll be ready."

The Lord Jeffs are 16-5 (not including yesterday's game against Wesleyan). They lost four games in Florida, and since returning from Spring Training, have only lost to East Connecticut State University. Today's game will be like the playoffs for Amherst.

"We need to emphasize the importance of the game to them [Amherst]," Stone said.

This game carries some additional importance for the Minutemen because it is the last home game of the year, and the final game until Tuesday.

"[It's good that we aren't playing this weekend because] we need rest because of all our injuries, [Jerry Creamer, Lou Olivieri, and Dan O'Leary]," Stone said.

The Minutemen send Scott Meaney (4-0) to the mound, but it is expected that several other pitchers including Rich Graham will see action.

Matt Lane and Scott Pudlo are the top two pitchers for Amherst. Lane is 2-1 with a 1.50 earned run average, and Pudlo is 7-2 with a 2.10 ERA.

Ken Craw comes into the game leading the Lord Jeffs in average, and homeruns. Craw is hitting .405, to go along with his two homers. Craig Goguen is second to Craw in average (.368) and first in runs batted in (20).

Atlantic 10 news: Darrell Whitmore from West Virginia and Angel Echevarria from Rutgers were named players-of-the-week. Drew Comeau was the only nominee from UMass.

THROWING MUSES

By JODY GABIN

Few artists have been able to capture imagination and revitalize music as Ziggy Marley and the Melody Makers have.

Conscious Party, their 1988 debut album on Virgin Records, earned them a top 40 hit ("Tomorrow People"), a Grammy for Best Reggae Recording, and a slew of sold-out tour dates.

Although their sound is rooted in strong reggae traditions, Ziggy, his brother Stephen and sisters Sharon and Cedella have expanded their sound to include elements of pop, soul, rock, R and B and African music.

"Reggae is a simple music — but it's from the heart," Ziggy says. "Just as people need water to drink — and buy it in bottles — people also need music. If it is true music, then the people will be drawn to it. You don't have to worry, if the music is filled with life's experiences."

"I tend to think of some of the songs I've written as being Sunday school songs," says Gordon Gano, lead singer of the Violent Femmes. "That would be give me such pleasure — to someday hear my songs being sung in a church or a Sunday school setting would be wonderful."

Quite an interesting aspiration, surely not one that too many pop artists share. Gano himself is no angel, he's just a musician with more than a passing interest in things Christian. Few artists could pull it off and be taken seriously by both churchgoers and clubgoers, but the Violent Femmes have.

The Femmes first came into the public eye in 1983, with the release of their self-titled debut LP on Slash Records. The album was stark and original, an angst-ridden Gano spent his words decrying his loneliness and making wise-guy threats. They became an underground sensation.

For Hallowed Ground, their follow-up LP, the Femmes moved towards a more country/gospel-tinged sound. Religious songs began popping up, such as the uplifting "Jesus Walking on the Water" and "It's Gonna Rain."

With the release of 3, their most recent effort to date, the Femmes have retreated back to their original sound. Gano's spiritual side is still there, but the record is livelier than Hallowed Ground or 1986's The Blind Leading the Naked.

"3 is back to the three of us playing live, on our basic instruments," Gano explains. "I like the idea of a title that didn't give a poetic, or not so poetic, extra connotation to this body of songs. It's just these songs for what they are."

Throwing Muses first took shape back in the early '80s, when lead singer Kristin Hersh and childhood friend Tanya Donelly taught each other to play guitar at age 14. While both attending college in Boston, the two began performing on the burgeoning Boston/Providence club scene, joined by bassist/cellist Leslie Langston and percussionist David Narcizo.

Sire Records signed the band in mid-1987, and 1988's House Tornado paved the way for the band's first international tour in the fall of that same year.

More recently, Throwing Muses have released Hunkpapa, whose title pays tribute to the band's enduring interest in Native American culture. Although somewhat more accessible than the band's previous efforts, Hunkpapa still offers an example of the band's melodically intricate musical style.

"The music we've done prior to this has been complex, with lots of countermelody and interplay," Hersh says. "This time we wanted to purify, not simplify, to give the music space and the listener an opportunity to get inside the sound."

20-year-old Queen Latifah became involved in music while still attending high school in her native East Orange, New Jersey.

Her discovery happened "overnight." Working with DJ Mark of the infamous Flavor Unit, Latifah landed a contract with Tommy Boy Records after the 45 King played her demo. As a result, "Wrath of My Madness" was released, showing a highly individual and forceful style tempered with reggae inflections. "Dance With Me," her second release, secured her a place in hip-hop as a vital new talent.

A talented stage performer, Queen Latifah's dynamic vocals and dance routines have critics both here and abroad raving. Of her performance at the 1989 New Music Seminar, a Blitz Magazine critic wrote, "Queen Latifah electrified the sullen assemblage with a staggering in-your-face set."

On stage with her dancers (the Safari Sisters 007 and 99), Latifah displays her energetic presence. "When I get on stage, I like to relate to the audience like I'm one of them," says Latifah. "They respect you more and they know you are a real person."

The music of Oklahoma's Hearts and Minds comes from the gut and soul, their words and arrangements are absolutely infectious. Their self-titled debut, was produced by John Mellencamp's guitarist, Mike Wanchic, and remains unaffected by over-production and studio tricks. "John [Mellencamp] actually sings a lot of his vocals live, just like James Brown used to," says vocalist Bruce Henderson. "We tried that too, and it really lends the record the live atmosphere of a band playing."

The result is pure rock 'n' roll, punctuated by Mick Wanchic's lap steel guitar, Andy York's dobro, and Alison Krause's country violin.

Ziggy Marley and the Melody Makers, Violent Femmes, Throwing Muses, Queen Latifah, and Hearts and Minds will be performing on Sunday at the Campus Pond. The concert is sponsored by UPC and begins at 12 p.m. Admission is free. Only those with a valid UMass ID will be admitted.

Amherst art goes public

By ANTONIA MAGUIRE
Collegian Staff

The phrase "painting the town red" could take on a whole new meaning this week in Amherst as the Amherst Public Art Task Force, in cooperation with the Bangs Community Center, presents a three day series of special events to celebrate the possibilities of art for the town.

The program, titled Visions of Amherst: Art in Public Places, which runs May 3-5, will include performances and readings, slide lectures and discussions, an architectual walking tour of Amherst and exhibitions of public art ideas and artworks. A highlight of the event is an exhibition in the East Room of the Bangs Center in which six local artists will show their varied ideas for artworks to brighten up different Amherst public settings.

The six were chosen from 23 proposals which were submitted by artists and designers through an open competition. The results range from a three-dimensional wall relief for the Amherst Junior High School and a narrative wall relief for the parking garage to be built behind CVS, to etched glass windows for the Jones Library and a stone wall work for the Robert Frost trail.

The official opening of the exhibition will take place on Friday at 5 p.m., coinciding with opening of the new Bangs Community Center expansion and the unveiling of the new Steven Piscitelli statue at the South end of the Bangs Center.

Visions of Amherst will also present two panel discussions. The first, which will take place on Friday, May 4 at 12:30 p.m., is entitled Three Perspectives of Public Art and Community will feature Rosemary Noon, Director of the Department of Cultural Affars in Lowell, Mass. Artists Visions: Public Art for Amherst, the second discussion, will take place on May 5, at 10 p.m., also at the Bangs Center, and will begin with a talk by Alan Peterfreund on the artist selection process in public art.

A full schedule of events can be picked up at the Bangs Community Center. Display advertisements and calendar listings will be available in the Amherst Bulletin and the Daily Hampshire Gazette over the next couple of days.

Regency at Hatch

Often called "the Temtations of the '90s," Regency, a critically-acclaimed five-man acapella group from Baltimore, Maryland, will be performing at the Hatch.

They combine their original soul/country acapella style with the sounds of such greats as Otis Redding, Elvis Presley, Sam Cooke and James Brown.

Regency has won the prestigious Nation Association of Campus Activities (NACA) Campus Contemporary Music Artists of the Year award in 1985, the NACA Campus Jazz Artists of the Year award in 1986, and the NACA Performing Artists of the Year award for both 1988 and 1989.

Regency is renowned for their dynamic stage presence, original choreography and amazing energy level. Their line-up includes twin brothers Dwayne and Wayne McNeil, Milton Ames, Duane Early and bass Anthony Griffin.

Regency will be performing at the Hatch on Thursday, May 3, from 3 p.m. to 9 p.m.

'Daughters' taught to write

By STEVE CLARK
Collegian Correspondent

A writing workshop for women will be offered on Saturday, May 12, and will be taught by local author Leslea Newman.

The workshop, entitled "We are All Daughters," concerns mother/daughter relationships. According to Newman, the objective is to get women to write about themselves and their relationships with others in a relaxed, non-competitive environment.

"What I like is for women to come and start writing and keep writing," Newman said. She would like to see that they learn something about themselves and get pleasure from their writing. Newman went on to describe the format of the workshop:

"I present a writing exercise, read an example, have my students write for about 20 minutes, and then each student has the opportunity to share her work and get feedback on it — loving, encouraging, nurturing feedback." Newman added that she has used this method of teaching before in her other workshops, including "Write From the Heart," which mainly involves short fiction writing, and "Poems From the Heart," for those interested in writing poetry.

Poetry was Newman's "first love," and when she left Boston University Graduate School, she said she began to experiment with other forms of writing.

"When I left school and started writing fiction I felt like this whole world opened up to me." She later went on to write a novel, Good Enough to Eat, and published several short stories as well.

"I don't think I was born with a silver spoon in my mouth," Newman said. "I think I was born with a pen in my hand."

Since 1986 she has written several books, the latest of which is entitled Secrets. Newman described the book as a collection of short stories which all have something in common. "Each story has a secret. The reader always knows the secret, sometimes all the characters know the secret, sometimes only one character knows the secret."

"The stories explore what happens when people keep secrets from each other, and what happens when people tell each other their deepest secrets."

Newman says it is different from all her other books in certain ways, but that the underlying theme in all the books is women telling the truths about our lives.

"Basically what I look for are the emotional truths of a story, and a lot of times to do that, you have to push your characters beyond real life situations and into extraordinary situations, and see what they would do under those circumstances."

Newman believes that your own writing is your own best teacher, and wants to apply this to her students' writings just as she has done to her own.

"I really let the writing reveal itself to me, rather than me controlling the writing," she said. And while her workshop is directed at women, she says that her books can be read and appreciated by anyone.

"We are All Daughters" will take place from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. on Saturday, May 12 in the Unitarian Church in Northampton.

A reading and booksigning of Secrets will be held on Friday, May 18, in the Neilson Browsing Room at Smith College. The reading is sponsored by the Smith College LBA.

Stone's 'Picture-Book Wars' follows the life of Poe

By DAN DONOGHUE
Collegian Correspondent

This upcoming week, the UMass Department of Theater and director Richard Trousdell will bring to life department member Dudley Stone's own Picture-Book Wars. A play concerned with ways of "seeing," as director Trousdell notes, Picture-Book Wars is the story of an imaginary meeting between writer Edgar Allan Poe and Civil War photographer Mathew Brady.

At the outset of the Civil War, Brady abandoned his portrait studio in New York to delve into the battlefields and create what has become an invaluable visual record of the War between the States (a collage which will provide the actual scenery for the play).

"When Brady was asked why he did this," playwright and theater MFA candidate Dudley Stone explains, "He said simply, 'A spirit in my feet said go and I went.' He wound up bankrupt and lost most of his negatives — many were taken in lieu of payment — but there was this force insisting that he go."

Poe enters the play epitomizing that dark side of human nature of which he wrote, and soon goads Brady into exploring another side of himself ultimately. While Brady has viewed the war, and perhaps his life, through a camera, Poe embodies those dark forces of a hardened imagination that will force Brady to look without the aid of his instrument and ultimately "see" himself differently.

The action for the play exists on many levels. Brady's imagination will take us from the stage of Carnegie Hall, back to his studio, to battlefields, and finally to a sort of "no man's land" where he must somehow reconcile the two sides of his nature.

Picture Book Wars will be performed at the Rand Theater. Performances are May 3-5 and 9-12 at 8 p.m. Including Saturday matinees on May 5 and 12 at 2 p.m. Admission is $5 for the general public and $3 for students and senior citizens. For tickets and further information, contact the Fine Arts Center Box Office at 545-2511. The Rand Theater is wheelchair accessible.

Comic Seinfeld 'makes a difference'

By NICK OSTIS
Collegian Correspondent

Comedian Jerry Seinfeld, no stranger to seasoned couch potatoes or comedy club enthusiasts, will perform a benefit for the Make A Difference Scholoarship Fund. The star of his own new NBC-TV comedy series, The Seinfeld Chronicles, he was elected America's "Funniest Male Stand-Up Comic" at the 1988 American Comedy Awards and has appeared on The Tonight Show and Late Night With David Letterman over 50 times.

The show is largely the brainchild of Southwest Issues Chairperson, Allison Rapp, who wanted to honor the memory of Rich Koster, Sharon Galligan and Joel Mangion, the latter two Southwest Area Government representatives.

Unlike every other area, SWAG decided not to give money to UPC for the spring pond concert so it could create this scholarship fund. In fact, unless there are radical changes, this could by the last Southwest Week due to the Senate's decision to take away $35,000, crucial funds for the annual production of its spring festivities. With this in mind, SWAG wants to make this one to remember.

SWAG's Susan Church explains the tribute. "We're not celebrating the way they died. We want to celebrate the way they lived, because Sharon and Joel were very active in our assembly. They were really good people. Sharon helped with the homeless and Rich was the type who was always making people laugh. No one ever knew he was hurting so badly. It's what they were here that provided the impetus for the scholarship, and it's going to be given to somebody who has worked hard in their community and tried to help other people."

Seinfeld, a former honor roll student at Queens College in New York, certainly works hard, making about 300 appearances a year in clubs, concert hall and casino showrooms. However, he doesn't see it that way.

"Stand-up comedy is not work to me. There's nothing in the world that I'd rather do."

When asked why he never takes a vacation, Seinfeld replies, "From what? My whole life is a vacation."

For those with a craving for the stage, ponder Seinfeld's sage advice about opportunities. "You may not need as many, or may need more. What matters is what you think. If it damages your confidence, it matters. But nothing matters if it doesn't shake your belief in yourself."

A welcome respite from hell week, this show should be hilarious and all for a worthy cause.

Jerry Seinfeld will be performing at the Fine Arts Center on Thursday, May 3, at 8 p.m. Admission is $2.

Kryptic talk

Teresa's Kryptic Trout talk about the infamous Butterfield Coffeehouse while doing a deodorant ad.

Rut: "We're headlining at Bunratty's on Sunday, May 6, the day after we play Butterfield."

Atticus: "We like Butterfield because they slaughter all the livestock they eat right there in the dining hall."

Rut: "He sings, too, and he does something really neat during the bridge to 'Republican Fuck.'"

Friday, May 18 at Axis, May 30 at Club 3 are upcoming gigs.

Rut: "Originally we were going to play weddings, but we've found that they insist you curb your feedback habits at most weddings."

Roger Moore: "Right now, we're playing gigs in support of our homeless tour. What this means is that we try to attract as many of the homeless in Boston to our shows as possible.

Israel celebrates, others protest

By JULIA SEREBRINSKY
Collegian Correspondent

Chancellor Duffey's refusal to sell Israeli government bonds owned by the University of Massachusetts spurred protests from several students who gathered for more than five hours yesterday in front of the Student Union Ballroom, where the UMass Hillel Foundation was celebrating Israeli Independence Day.

At least three protesters carried signs calling Israel an apartheid state and one protester carried a Palestine Liberation Organization flag.

At the beginning of the celebration protesters tried blocking the entrance into the Student Union Ballroom but stopped after Margaret Arsenault, an advisor in the Student Activities Office, intervened.

Protesters chose to air their grievances during the commemoration of the 42nd year of Israel's Independence because they said the occasion celebrates a freedom not shared by Palestinians there, said protester Rachel Maiore, a UMass junior.

"We think that the Israeli Independence Day is a lie," she said. "There is no independence for the inhabitants. There is a Palestinian enslavement."

Several protesters held signs comparing Israel to the Republic of South Africa, which prompted many passers-by to confront the protesters and attempt to rebut their claims.

Members of Hillel, the largest Jewish student group on campus, were dismayed by the protest and said comparing Israel to South Africa is inappropriate and misleading.

"Arab citizens enjoy full rights including the right to vote which is not true in the case of South Africa," said Gadi Karmi, a UMass graduate student. "Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza are living under a military administration in what is basically a war zone. I hope that their fate will be determined by negotiations not violence."

Hillel President Randi Dubno said,"It is untrue and false that Israel is an apartheid state." She added that Hillel's commemoration of Israel's independence was not intended to be a political event, but a celebration of Israel's existence.

However, one protester said he is opposed to Israel's existence. "I don't agree that there should be a state for Jews," said UMass student Joshua Gold. "There should be a secular state for everybody."

Professor remembers Woodstock

By SARAH DEMASTER

In the more than twenty years since almost 500,000 people gathered on a farm in Bethel, New York for a three-day concert in the summer of 1969, Woodstock has become "the Betsy Ross of the 1960s," said Professor Michael Frisch of the State University of New York at Buffalo in a lecture at Memorial Hall last night.

As Joe Cocker and Country Joe Macdonald played in the background, a group of about 40 students,

Administration and GEO to meet

Session seeks to resolve conflicts prior to elections

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

A negotiation session today at the Whitmore Administration Building will again try to resolve the three conflicts between the Graduate Employee Organization and University of Massachusetts administrators before a union election for graduate students may be held.

Marc Kenen, GEO negotiating committee member, said while some progress has been made on the three points, the two sides are still "inching along." in negotiations.

The GEO, an affiliate of District 65/United Auto Workers, voted Wednesday to ask teaching assistants to withhold undergraduate's final spring grades in yet another attempt to prod the administration into an agreement over the disputed election.

The parties have been unable to come to a conclusion over three stipulations related to a union election of graduate students.

The GEO wants the administration to remain impartial during the election process to insure a 'fair and free' union election. The administration has refused stating that it wants to be an active participant in the election.

The adminstration has requested the GEO to promise not to hold any work action from the time an agreement is reached until the election. The GEO has refused stating that this would prevent them from protesting any change in work conditions or fees.

The GEO also has requested that the administration support them when they eventually go before the Massachusetts Labor Relationns Commission, which approves and certifies unions.

Rally to be held for Soviet Jewry

Hillel to address increased anti-Semitism in Russia

The University of Massachusetts chapter of Hillel is scheduled to hold a Soviet Jewry Awareness Rally today on the Student Union steps at noon to protest the continued poor treatment of Jews in the Soviet Union.

Randi Dubno, president of Hillel, said the increased Russian nationalism and hundreds of anti-Semitic rallies that have been held in the Soviet Union this year are a strong significant concern of the group.

"We want to inform the University community of the pogroms which are threatened in the Soviet Union this month," she said. "We can't stand for this as a group."

A pogrom is an organized massacre of any helpless group but especially of Jews. Pogroms were a traditional tool of Russian tsars.

Russian nationalist groups have scheduled a May 5 pogrom aimed at Jews for throughout the country, according to Dubno.

Dubno said this is not only an issue for Jews but for the entire University community.

"People can't stand in the face of oppression," she said. "They must be willing to stand up."

Dubno said students from the Third World Caucus, the Black Jewish Coalition and Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual Alliance are expected to speak at the rally. She said other student leaders may also speak.

ENRICH YOUR EDUCATION
BY $1,000
A MONTH.

If you're a math, engineering or physical sciences major, you could be earning $1,000 a month during your junior and senior years.

This excellent opportunity is part of the Navy Nuclear Propulsion Officer Candidate Program. It's one of the most prestigious ways of entering the nuclear field – and rewarding, too. You get a $4,000 bonus upon entrance into the program, and $2,000 more when you complete your Naval studies.

You also receive a year of paid graduate-level training that's the most comprehensive in the world. And you'll acquire expertise with state-of-the-art nuclear reactor and propulsion plant technology.

As a Navy officer, you'll lead the adventure while gaining high-level experience that will help make you a leader in one of the world's high-tech industries.

In addition to the professional advantages, nuclear-trained officers get an unbeatable benefits package, travel opportunities, promotions and a solid salary.

Information disclosed about class disruption

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

More information about the anthropology class disrupted last week by a group of white males was disclosed at the Faculty Senate meeting yesterday.

The anthropology class, "Culture Through Film," taught by Professor Arthur Keene, was disrupted last Tuesday night during a showing of the film The Life and Times of Harvey Milk, a documentary about the assassination of the first openly gay elected politician in San Francisco.

The 10 to 15 males entered the room in Thompson Hall and stood on the stage, facing the audience with hands on their hips. Some of the group remained on the sides and in back of the room.

According to Dennis Madson, only the names of the drivers of the two carloads of men were taken. One driver was a student, the other student was not, Madson said.

Madson said the rest of the group was not identified and their names were not taken.

Provost O'Brien reiterated his concern about the incident which he deemed "homophobic."

"This kind of disruption simply cannot exist in a University where free and open discussion is required," he said. "I personally intend to insure that they are prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law."

O'Brien said he hopes this sends a strong message to the University community that "actions like this will not be tolerated at all."

Madson, who said this is the second class disruption this semester, echoed O'Brien's thought. "We have standards of civility," he said. "We can't stand for any disruption of classes. There needs to be civility and an understanding of other's views [at this University]."

In other faculty senate news, Vice Chancellor for University Relations and Development Deidre Ling said the University raised between $10 million to $11 million in private support this year, an increase from $9.2 million in 1989.

Ling, who is leaving UMass shortly to head the Middlesex School in Concord, thanked her colleagues for their "support and encouragement in my five jobs and 12 and half years at UMass."

Tom Skinner

Tom Skinner used to be a Harlem gang leader, but now he leads economically disadvantaged youths and adults from the inner city in learning the skills and understanding they need to negotiate the system in order to become self-determining individuals.

Skinner will deliver a speech, titled 'Ending Oppression and Restoring Humanity' tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

He has committed his life to become a force for constructive, rather than destructive leadership.

Skinner is president of Tom Skinner Associates (TSA) a Harlem-based organization that was established in 1964, dealing primarily with youth and adults in the inner-city community, as well as with Fortune 500 companies, students on college campuses, and men and women from the arts and sports world.

Skinner was born and raised in Harlem, where he currently resides with his family. Skinner says he is "committed to doing something about the suffering, shame and misery in America."

He is also an invited lecturer for the "Annual Perspectives Series" sponsored by The Alliance Christian Fellowship, a UMass registered student organization.

Tom Skinner is the author of four books: Black and Free, How Black is the Gospel, If Christ is the Answer, What are the Questions? and Words of Revolution.

Memorial to be held

A memorial service to mark the anniversary of the death of Paul W. Ryan, a University of Massachusetts junior who died last May in a swimming accident, will be held at noon Saturday in the Newman Center.

Ryan, 22, of Lowell, died May 6 while swimming with friends in Puffers Pond in North Amherst. A resident of Mackimmie Residence Hall, Ryan was a landscape architecture major.

WMUA alums return to mark 40th

By MIYAN LEVENSON
Collegian correspondent

More than 100 WMUA alumni are expected to return to campus tomorrow to celebrate 40 years on the air. The radio station will be hosting a reunion dinner at the Faculty Club with past members arriving from all across the nation.

The 40th Anniversary committee, headed by WMUA Chairperson Scott Lever, spent the fall semester compiling a mailing list of WMUA alumni from old yearbooks, Collegian articles, and information from alumni who have stayed in touch with the station. Attending the banquet will be WMUA alumni currently working for NBC Sports, CNN, The Boston Globe, WBCN, WXKS, Rykodisc, and WBZ, just to name a few.

"The response has been great," Lever said. "Everyone has a story about their days working at WMUA. From the sound of it, things weren't that different whether it was 1949 or 1969 or 1989. And a lot of the alumni are willing to offer advice on how to get started in the media too, which should be great for anyone who's graduating."

WMUA first went on the air in 1948 when the transmitter at the Fort Devens campus was dismantled and brought to Amherst. The station has grown from a 10 watt AM station broadcasting only to the dorms to its current status as a 1000 watt FM stereo station broadcasting to the entire Pioneer Valley and into Vermont. The studios have moved from the fifth floor tower of South College to Marston Hall to its current home in the basement of the Campus Center.

T-shirts and coffee mugs bearing the WMUA 40th anniversary logo are available at the station. Anyone interested in attending the Reunion Dinner must purchase ticket ($15 each) in advance. For more information, contact Scott Lever at WMUA, 545-2876.

Speaker: electoral process needs democracy

By TAMARA SILBERMAN
Collegian Correspondent

American citizens are alienated from the electoral process, said Dennis Kelly from Americans for a Direct Democracy, at a Town Meeting in Memorial Hall Wednesday.

Kelly, who described his organization as "very grass roots," spoke about the need to bring Democracy back into the electoral process. The most decisive factor determining whether a candidate will win an election depends on how much financing he or she has been able to receive, he said.

Big money, or the money fronted to politicians by large corporations, is what decides who will make political decisions for us, Kelly said. According to the Study Group for Electoral Democracy, the average campaign cost of winning a U.S. Senate seat was nearly $3 million dollars in 1988. Because of this, we have had less turnover in Congress in the last two decades than the Soviet Politburo, one political observer has noted.

Americans for Direct Democracy will be petitioning the Massachusetts Representatives of the 102nd (next) Congress to enact legislation that would enable citizens to have more participation in the electoral process, Kelly said. Among the legislation proposed by Kelly's group would be bills to establish total public campaign-financing for federal elections, prohibit registered-for-profit organizations from influencing federal elections and a bill to dissolve the Electoral College.

Kelly told those in attendance "you guys are the activists." Although we may not be living in Lithuania or China, "we still have the power to change how government works," he said.

Ex-hostage reported weak, expected in D.C.

BOSTON (AP) — During his 42 month in captivity, Frank Reed was told his mother had died and did not learn she was alive until he was released this week, his daughter said Thursday.

"He was told she had passed away," said Marilyn Langston. "He didn't know she was alive until she was released. We were able to tell him she was very much alive."

Reed's mother, 91-year-old Leota Sprague, shares an apartment in Malden with Reed's wife, Fahima, and the couple's 9-year-old son, Tarek.

Langston said she was told Thursday by a State Department spokesman that doctors decided Reed, who is weak after 42 months in captivity, should undergo further medical tests at a military hospital in the Washington area.

"He's very weak," Langston said in a telephone interview from her home in Malden, Mass. "They wanted to check him out a little more."

Frances Jones, a spokeswoman for the State Department's Bureau of Consular Affairs, said Reed would be flown to Andrews Air Force Base Friday and then probably be taken to the Walter Reed Army Medical Center, where former hostage Robert Polhill was taken after being released.

Jones said it was unclear how long Reed would stay in Washington before continuing to Massachusetts.

Langston said she would fly to Washington Friday to meet her father.

In a telephone call at 2:30 AM Wednesday, Reed told Langston that he had tried to escape his captors but was quickly caught and badly beaten for the attempt.

"He told me he'd been beaten. He did try to escape and they'd beaten him very badly," Langston said in a telephone interview from her home in suburban Malden.

On Wednesday evening, Langston tied a yellow ribbon around a tree in front of her home. On the house she hung a large banner reading, "Free at last, Frank Reed, April 30, 1990!"

She said Reed was denied medical attention for his wounds and is still recovering from them. Reed said he had tried to escape alone, but it was unclear when during his captivity he had made the attempt, she said.

■ Woodstock

professors, and interested people assembled to hear Frisch talk about "Woodstock and the Misremembered Images of the 1960s."

"Woodstock has remained a major icon," he said.

A professor told Frisch that one of the first things that pops out of students minds when he mentions the 60s is Woodstock, just as Betsy Ross is often the first person mentioned when Frisch asks his students what they think of when they think of American history, he said.

Frisch, who attended all three days of the concert, said he had a "groovy" time. With his short hair, blue sportscoat, and green tie, he received laughter from audience members when he said they must imagine him with longer hair, and that he should have brought a costume change.

However, on a more serious note, Frisch said that in light of the fact that the anniversary of Woodstock falls so close to that of the killing of four students, and wounding of nine others at Kent State University on May 4, 1969, "I thought it might seem frivolous or sort of ridiculous to turn to recollections of bell bottom jeans, marijuana pipes and whatever else has come in peoples' minds to be associated with Woodstock."

The media has played a major role in misleading many people into thinking that Woodstock is the epitome of the the 60s, Frisch said. The media tends to label the 60s as a time of political idealism and flower children, when in fact people were facing many real issues, such as the war in Vietnam, he said.

When he hears the word flower children, Frisch said he thinks of the group that was in the car ahead of him on the way to Woodstock, that had chains, brass knuckles, and seemed to him to be bikers, he said.

"Obviously a lot of people had come expecting a lot of different things," he said. There was no violence, however, he added.

Frisch said that Woodstock was actually an experiment in learning what a community means. Promoters advertised the concert as a rural retreat, where people could "walk around for three days without seeing a sky scraper," he said. However, Frisch said, "People began to realize they had brought the city with them with a vengeance," as they waited for hours in the traffic that clogged the road leading to Bethel, NY.

Because of the rain and the large number of people, the romanticism of the event had disappeared by Saturday, Frisch said.

"At least four million people claimed to have been there, but they actually fled after the rain and chaos," Frisch said. "So there are a number of people walking around who have the feeling of having been there but having missed it all."

He said that feeling of having missed out has carried over to students today, who wonder why students do not seem to be as active today as students in the 60s.

Students were not any different then than they are now, but became different because of events that occurred, Frisch said.

Navy looks into training dolphins to protect subs

SEATTLE (AP) — Animal rights advocates and the Navy have agreed on environmental studies on the use of dolphins as security guards at the Trident nuclear submarine base at Bangor.

In addition, the Navy has agreed in a separate document to stop capturing the marine mammals until an environmental impact statement on the taking of dolphins from the wild is completed.

Both sides said the agreement would delay fro months the arrival of trained dolphins at the base on Hood Canal, where they would be deployed to protect the Tridents from underwater intruders.

The agreement announced Wednesday, negotiated to resolve a 13-month-old federal lawsuit, was hailed by John T. Costo, a lawyer for the Progressive Animal Welfare Society and 14 other groups.

"I think it's a great settlement," Costo said. "And it's great that the Navy has acknowledged that it has obligations under federal environmental laws."

Congress gave the Navy permission in 1987 to capture as many as 25 dolphins a year without supervision under animal-protection laws.

Costo said the Navy could decide to make either an environmental study or a less extensive environmental assessment of the dolphin guard project.

One week ago today a hate group spread the Israeli flag on the Whitmore ramp, inviting bystanders to trudge mud on the Star of David. The Jewish people have been walked on for too long."

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted

The truth about Collegian life

I've been spending too much time in this bottomless Campus Center pit. I'm beginning to think that maybe there is truth to the frequent accusations about our "sub-cerebral" editorials. We don't get enough sun and that essential oxygen for the brain.

A quote by Frank Miller, Jr. looms over the Editorial desk rationalizing that, hey, "The day you write to please everyone you no longer are in journalism. You are in show business."

Reggie Santiago

I've spent mornings, days and nights searching for an elixir that might take away the frustration and guilt for each mistake made on the Editorial/Opinion page.

I've finally come to the annoying conclusion that, as simple as that theory might sound, my pal Frank can eat and suck on it for a while. It simply doesn't work. For me, anyway.

Everybody wants to be pleased. If they're not, it's my fault.

Just as I learn, live and breathe through this computer terminal day to day, I will also undoubtedly die by it. Or of a nervous breakdown. Or a migraine. Whichever.

A day in the life of an (associate) editor is one spent trying to cut and improve other people's words while, at the same time, being bombarded from left and right by insults from infuriated readers and struggling to distinguish personal from professional criticism.

Inadvertently displeasing everyone seems to be the norm.

Picture this. You've just spent eight hours in a windowless basement sitting in front of a computer terminal, incessantly trying to figure out where the darn blinking cursor is hiding, attempting to make otherwise incoherent mumbo-jumbo sound a little more intelligent. . . I'm not finished.

Try being harassed (via the telephone or a close and intimate view of a mouth) by a stranger who seems to know more than you do about your own job, condescendingly informing you of their disgust with everything about you and your page, and/or accusing you of deliberate negligence.

Never mind that this isn't exactly the New York Times or that I'm but a lowly student still trying to learn my craft. I'm treated as if I should know from birth the ins and outs of a newspaper.

Irate phone calls are one of my countless sources of inspiration — to change my career goals, like going into hog farming in the boondocks of Maine or taking up tap dancing.

Journalism shapes lives like no other. It tugs at humanity's strings and begs for reaction with every word that's printed and said. "Responsible tugging," however, is another story.

Printing editorials that run smack against other more popular perspectives makes for an interesting page. But be prepared to deal with the consequences (refer to the above-mentioned "irate phone caller").

"How dare you print that when it clearly reeks of all the "-isms?"

"Well, we have to print every point of view, whether you agree with it or not," the editorial staff says in unison.

Exasperated, the caller viciously counterattacks. "But it's the wrong side. Why are you here if you don't even know that?"

I want so badly to say, "Because I like being yelled at?" But I don't. Their problem with the page has been placed squarely on my shoulders. I don't like it.

Maybe Nora Ephron was right when, without batting an eye, she said, "The world is full of people who honestly don't know that journalists are not their friends." Why should I try being civil and proper, like I've been taught, to people who don't give a flying foot?

What was at first an exciting prospect at learning, living and breathing journalism has become a cruel lesson in hardened facial expressions to hide fear and exude confidence and has resulted in a less enthusiastic view of everything that moves or speaks. A nervous twitch now and then threatens to grow into a full-blown scratching habit. Or maybe that's what journalism is all about.

By the way, we're looking for an associate editor for next semester. Still interested? Come see me and my co-editor Gayle.

"WHY, WHEN I WAS A BOY WE WERE SO BAD OFF WE DIDN'T HAVE A SINGLE CELEBRITY INTERESTED IN OUR PLIGHT!"

Budget battle takes new approach

The good fight is not over. We have rallied until we are tired in the feet and blue in the face, and yet the time hasn't come to beat a peaceful retreat.

The truth is, the effort at responsible citizenship never ends. Our schools, the school of our parents, brothers and sisters, and of our children tomorrow, demand our support and attention. Even more crucial is the need of the thousands of people who want to go to college this spring or next fall and will be turned away. They need our vote and our voice.

Here's a few quick facts for you: next year's seniors will have lived through a 45 percent increase in costs during their four years. From FY84 to FY90 the percentage of financial aid that students needed but couldn't get rose from 23.3 percent to 49 percent. And finally, even though students at UMass/Amherst can't get the financial aid they need, the average family income of UMass/Amherst freshmen rose by 26 percent from 1984 to 1987, faster than the state average of 19 percent. [These numbers come from the Budget Office and SAREO.]

A group of students, including myself, are putting together a newspaper that will be distributed throughout the state. It will be distributed at the graduation ceremony, alumni weekend, the State House, to labor and business groups and to the Democratic State Convention.

The paper does not favor any political party or candidate, but demands that all of them take the quality of our public higher education system seriously.

To make the newspaper happen, we will need some interested writers (only a few!) and people to edit stories. It is near the end of the semester, but the work shouldn't take too much time

I would also like to ask all members of the University community to respond in short letters to the following question: What does your education or work at UMass/Amherst mean to you? The response will be edited and published in a section of the newspapers entitled "Views from the Campus."

Ideas and letters are welcome, and may be sent to 420 Student Union (the phone number is 545-0341), where you may contact me for information about joining the paper.

Thank you and good luck on finals.

Attacks on women still continue despite celebration of awareness

I am writing in response to the news story "Rape reported Sat. in parking Lot 22" (May 1).

Being on my third year at the University, I am a regular reader of the Collegian. I look forward to reading it everyday and am disappointed if I miss one. After Tuesday's edition, I was completely discouraged and frustrated.

My anger and frustration is not towards the writing or the Collegian itself, but simply towards the facts: "Saturday at 3:24 a.m. a woman reported being raped in Lot 22." SATURDAY! This occurred the day after Sexual Assault Awareness Day, consisting of rallies, vigils, marches and a speak-out!

First, I am thoroughly affected as a woman. Second, as someone who was actively involved with Friday's events, I took this as a slap in the face. And third, and most discouraging of all, I was affected as a survivor of rape. This will now prevail to be one added fear that I will live with.

Also in Tuesday's Collegian were reports of anti-Semitic and racist graffiti found on campus. Along with the continuing news about last week's "Straight Pride" rally. When will this harassment stop?

I am sure there are many others that are as discouraged as I am. For the woman that was raped Saturday, I say, "You are not alone, you are a survivor."

For those of us that continuously work for changes and feel helpless from the results — I wish I had an answer.

Asylum from AT&T's atrocious ACUS account impossible

I don't like ACUS.

I'll tell you why. First of all, it's because AT&T runs it. And personally, any company that can make a commercial where they wind up looking better than the other guy, even after they've just proven to you that their prices are higher than his, really scares me.

Secondly, it's the fact that I have to dial 57 numbers before I can talk to my friend in Akron, Ohio. What the hell is "Personal Security" anyway? I always thought it meant that you were wearing clean underwear or something.

Thirdly, it's that $70 limit thing. AT&T shuts my phone off about once every two weeks.

What happens is this: I go over the limit. They shut me off. I tease them into turning my phone back on by sending them a few bucks and a note promising "more cash soon to come."

I don't send them any more cash. I go over the limit. It's an infinite loop which repeats itself every couple of weeks.

I've been shut down so many times, I figure by now they gotta have a switch over there that says "Brykman" under it. And every two weeks they hire some guy named Lou to hit the switch.

Yesterday, I got fed up. I'd had enough. I wanted out. I called AT&T.

Important note: If you've ever tried calling AT&T, you know what a harrowing experience it is. If you haven't tried it, don't do it unless you've got enough beer and bean dip in the fridge so you won't have to leave the room for the next three days.

I'll tell you, you don't know what being on "hold" means until you've called AT&T.

Steve Brykman

At AT&T they don't got "hold." They got "Death hold." That means, essentially, that you could die before you actually got the opportunity to talk to someone.

Fortunately, I was prepared for "Death hold " and had made my packy run early.

"Hello, AT&T," the voice said, awakening me from my third day of anticipatory slumber.

"Uh, hi," I stammered in disbelief, "I'd like to get off ACUS."

"Sir, I'm afraid that's impossible. Nobody leaves ACUS.

"Ah, ACUS. Just saying those four letters gets me feelin' tingly all over. It's a wonderful service — ACUS. In fact, I'd wager it's the best thing that's happened to you in your entire college career.

"Remember back when you and your roommate had to argue about who made that call to Akron, Ohio? Such dilemmas exist no more. Remember the time your phone got shut off when your roommate didn't pay the bill? Remember that?"

"Yeah, I remember. But nowadays my phone gets shut off every two weeks, regardless of whether or not I pay my bill. How come you guys keep doin' that?"

"I dunno. Force of habit, I guess."

For those fellow students who find themselves in the same situation, I provide the following: "Patented Brykman Method for Calling People Without Having To Pay For It."

1. Call Collect.
2. When the operator asks your friend if he'll accept the charges, start talking.
3. Keep talking. The key here is not let the operator know if you accept the charges or not.

Using this method, you can converse for a good five minutes or more until, eventually, the operator will begin yelling at you to shuddup so your friend can answer the question, after which she will probably, as revenge, have Lou come and disconnect your phone.

ARTS & LIVING

World of rap & hip-hop begets one loser, one winner

By JON DRUKMAN
Collegian Correspondent

Hello, and welcome to the wild world of Junkieism. Today we venture into the wild world of rap and hip-hop. Fasten your seat belts, because there might be turbulence . . .

Today's big loser is A Tribe Called Quest who have produced a really boring rap album called, improbably enough, People's Instinctive Travels and the Paths of Rhythm. Uh huh. Kind of a sad debut, but let's start with the good points. Well, it has a nice cover. Other than that, it's boring beyond belief. De La Soul managed to pull off the slow, mellow rapping trick because they kept it short and simple, with lots of intriguing breaks and samples. Here, the Tribe just keeps to one groove for the entire song. Anybody even casually acquainted with rap knows that good breaks are absolutely essential for a killer tune. Nothing is worse than four minutes of one riff over and over again. "Can I Kick" features the intro from Lou Reed's "Walk on the Wild Side" for the duration. Good choice, but tiresome after a surprisingly short time.

DISC JUNKIE

The rapping is pretty lame too. I'm not saying I could do any better, but then again, I'm not trying to sell any rap albums. People have been talking about the song "I Left My Wallet In El Segundo" because it contains Mexican elements, which, admittedly, are in there, but have absolutely no effect. A Tribe Called Quest have got to go back to the drawing board, I'm afraid.

Just a few weeks ago I mentioned the debut EP by the band Consolidated. Little did I know that their first full-length album was just about to be released. Well, I'm now older, wiser and in possession of the disc in question. It's called The Myth of Rock and it's quite a scorcher. In fact, it completely blows away their first EP, and since it includes the only really kick ass track from the EP anyway, it's safe to say that the EP is now totally redundant.

The Myth of Rock is something of a loose concept album, with most of the tracks having something to do with the corrupt and decadent America of today. In particular, Consolidated are into dissing the media. The album kicks off with "Product," featuring a little sample collage ala Negativland, designed to piss on MTV's parade. From there on out, the hip-hop grooves kick some ass while the band rants and raves. A very solid album, overall.

One track, "Fight the Fascists," might be similar in title to a Public Enemy opus, and Consolidated are not that far away from PE in terms of outlook and musical direction. One thing that separates this band from the rest is their wild sense of humor. They sample This is Spinal Tap in places, and ram samples together in amusing ways elsewhere. On one track, the band is interviewed by a female reporter who is puzzled by Adam Sherburne's insistence on being referred to as "Brian Wilson."

I'm kind of in love with this album, but looking at it objectively, I have to say that from time to time, the band gets a little too wrapped up in their politicizing and the lyrics suffer, but overall they strike a good balance between political consciousness and lyrical accessibility. Fortunately, the music is dynamite and even when they get a bit heavy handed, the beat still cooks. I have a feeling that Consolidated are going to be a band to watch. They are the hands-down winner this week.

Music-lovers: Go to these!!

Talent of Gorka refreshing change

JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

There is an ongoing folk revival that's been tiring itself out, but John Gorka makes it all seem new and fully-aged at the same time, and you can hear it at the Iron Horse tomorrow night.

His full baritone and fluid melodies are soothing and reminiscent of Gordon Lightfoot, but he's a contemporary of Suzanne Vega, Shawn Colvin and Bill Morrissey. Nanci Griffith invited Gorka to the Texas songwriting mecca, the Kerrville Folk Festival where he won the New Folk Award of 1984.

Murmurs circulated among fellow performers at clubs to the effect of: "Have you heard this guy? . . . But they're amazing songs; so simple, yet not like anybody else's."

And that's a perfect way to describe his music.

"I Saw a Stranger with Your Hair" is a tale of lost love, told by a crescendo of voices in the chorus, and a calm introspective lyric. "I saw a stranger with your hair/Tried to make her give it back/So I could send it off to you/Maybe Federal Express/'Cause I knew you'd miss it . . . But you're never hard to find in a crowd/The people around you smiling out loud/Their feet don't touch the ground/No their feet don't touch the ground."

Gorka has had time to create his songs, but it results in an effortless sound, and dark and solid thoughts. This is evidenced in "Raven in the Storm," an essay verbalizing human fear.

"I'm the scratching in the ceiling/I'm advice you shouldn't give . . . I'm the darkness in your daughter/I'm the spot beneath the skin."

Listening and learning from others, including Canadian ballad-witer Stan Rogers, he asked questions of them so he could return home and write songs with a universal appeal. He succeeds and they separate themselves with an aged grace that is refreshing.

John Gorka plays the Iron Horse tomorrow night with Jim Infantino. 7 p.m. $8.

'Rigor Mortis': Lively play by Grunes offers extraordinary entertainment

By PAUL DEGEORGES
Collegian Correspondent

As members of a society in which the most popular music is the mindless saccharine of top 40, television is all but disposable and the biggest movies are still the predictable pap Hollywood pumps into the malls, we must continually count our blessings for the occasional artist who dares to be different.

Playwright Dorothy Grunes, however, is proof that the avant-garde is as alive and well as ever. Entertainment that disturbs, moves and challenges its audience to think is still hard to find, but not long ago at Mount Holyoke College, conventions were carved up and the remains were tossed to a ravenous Chien Analou.

The result was Rigor Mortis, a fragmented love story revolving around a man, a woman and a door, set in no particular time, and aside from the sparse sets indicating a bar and a bedroom, no particular place. The performance was characterized by a hype, melancholy tone that served as the dramatic vehicle to deliver an essentially bleak philosophy on love.

"Love," our voice of doom narrator explains with a cynical laugh, "... Hamlet tossing in his restless sleep. Calling out, alas, in vain to the lifeless castle. Reaching out his frail arms to find himself wrapped around Jocaste still. Love is the nightmare."

> "There is a lot of art. There is a lot of bad art. But there is not a lot of drama."
> Dorothy Grunes

Grunes, an English major in her second year at Mount Holyoke College, studied in London under New York Times drama critic, Benedict Nightengale at Balliol College, Oxford last summer. She intends on making playwriting a career but does not plan on ever becoming conventional.

"Right now, theater is an elitist pastime. No one can change this unless drama conforms to our post-modernist, post-punk, post-everything society."

Which means quite idealy that if she had her way the most popular theatre would be the total antithesis of popular theatre (as we now know it).

"If you can make one person think a little differently, your creation is a success," she claims. "I was depressed about Samuel Beckett's death. When performances of his plays were offensive in high-class European social circles, they were at the same time praised at the San Quentin prison."

Of her own performances she says, "If you don't intellectualize, you may find my plays offensive."

The two biggest problems Grunes faces are recognition and support for her plays. The problem is that the two are so closely interrelated. She had to hire a technical crew, pay the rent for the performance hall and finance all public relations out of her own pocket.

The result however, was surprising, especially to Grunes. "Over one hundred people came! Which proves that there is a definite receptiveness in the community for Avant-Garde theatre."

Her success has surprised a lot of people and Mount Holyoke College has decided to put on a reading of her next play, just completed and described by the author as "bizarre and sort of evil."

"There is a lot of art. There is a lot of bad art. But there is not a lot of drama," claims Grunes.

So, sometimes if you're not quite sure about what movie to see at the Dead Mall and your ready for something really new, explore the area's avant-garde. You might just be shocked at what you've been missing.

'Silos' bring uniqueness, dynamic sound to the Valley Sunday night

By RICH BAILEN
Collegian Correspondent

The Silos will be bringing their refreshing folk sound to the Iron Horse this Sunday night.

Their new self-titled album is a great collection of songs from a couple of guys who have forged a dynamic sound. Bob Rupe and Walter Salas-Humara have been playing together since high school, and prove that practice does indeed make perfect. Their last Album, Cuba, was an indie favorite and garnered the band a small cult following. After the release of that album, Rupe and Salas-Humara loaded up their van and began touring small clubs.

Now it seems the Silos are on the verge of "making it big." Just this past month the band was featured in Newsweek and Musician magazines. It brings to mind the excitement Springsteen fans must have experienced when the Boss showed up on the covers of Time and Newsweek back in '76.

The Silos new album contains 12 original songs penned by Rupe and Salas-Humara. All the songs were recorded at the Florida Theatre in Gainesville, a movie house chosen to provide an open sound. The effect is a magnificently produced album. From the infectious "Picture of Helen" to the hypnotic chant of "I'm Over You," this album really rocks. The all-Spanish "Porque No" is the definite single on the album, but when was the last time a Spanish song broke into the mainstream? By remaining devoted to their own music, the Silos deliver quality.

The Silos also introduce the beautiful voice of Amy Allison, whose supporting vocals on "The Only Story I Tell" add incredible dimension, reminiscent of "Don't Give Up," the duet between Peter Gabriel and Kate Bush.

If you have any energy leftover after day-long rocking at the pond, the trek to Northampton will be well worth the effort. The Silos are proving themselves to an ever growing audience. Find out what all the hype is about.

Chorale to perform

By NICK OSTIS
Collegian Correspondent

The UPC concert on Sunday figures to attract a huge crowd. However, those with a penchant for something other than pop music might be inclined to attend the University chorale and Chorale Chamber Singers' concert at 3 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium on the same day.

The group will tour the Soviet Union and Poland from from May 29 to June 12 this spring. In preparation for that tour — which will stop in Leningrad, Moscow, Warsaw, Estonia and Krakow — the Chorale will perform essentially the program that's going to be presented overseas.

According to manager Christine Gaboury, "The Chorale was founded as a student organization in 1948. We perform music from the 13th, 14th and 15th centuries straight through to contemporary pieces," she said.

"We do jazz, spirituals and folk songs; a lot of works in different languages, too. The chamber group is performing several pieces in Russian for the tour. We're also doing some Yiddish folk songs arranged by Dr. Robert Stern of the Music Department as well as a gospel piece," Gaboury said.

What's particularly impressive about this organization is their independence. They have individually and collectively raised the money for the tour and arranged all the details of publicity, equipment and tour planning.

Chorale member David Almeida enjoys the music but his satisfaction from being a part of the group doesn't end there.

"The Chorale is unique on campus because it focuses a lot on music as well as the spiritual and social interaction of the people," said Almeida. "It's mostly comprised of people who are not music majors. It's for people from all different departments on campus and gets you into seeing what other people are doing. In this particular concert, there's something for everybody. The chamber singers are doing some madrigals and we're doing some acappella pieces, too."

Conducted by Professor Richard du Bois, the 50 plus voice ensemble will perform the premiere of Dr. Frederick Tillis' "The Time Has Come" and Jeff Homes' "Save Me," featuring the Tillis/Holmes Duo with vocalist Horace Clarence Boyer. Other selections include "ISaiah 2" by Professor du Bois and "Magnificat" by Flor Peters. The University Chorale Chamber Singers will premiere Dr. Stern's "Three Lullabies" based on Yiddish folk songs, selected choruses from Irving Fine's "The Hour Glass" and various Russian songs.

Tickets for the concert are $6 for the general public and $3 for students and seniors. They will be sold at the door at Bowker Auditorium or in advance at the Fine Arts Center Box Office (545-2511).

Here's why she loves heavy metal so much

By DANIELLE DOWLING
Collegian Staff

I love heavy metal.

When I speak these words, people tend to cringe first with these ghastly expressions of disgust on their faces, then inquire, "Do you like Guns-n-Roses?"

I politely answer, "No, I like thrash/progressive/speed metal, not the commercial crap." To which the usual reply is, "Oh." But I know behind that 'Oh,' there are so many questions. Is she a devil worshipper? Does she have sex with squirrels? Did she have a horrible childhood and because of it was forced into the seedy world of leather and fur clad machismo?

I'm not surprised by any of the questions that are thrown my way pertaining to heavy metal. They're all a part of common misconceptions held by the general public at large about this form of music. However, I feel compelled, as one who appreciates metal, to educate John Q. Public thereby curing the ignorance that abounds. But how does one go about defending music that has been so negatively stereotyped?

I suppose the only way to go about it is to give some samples of positive or at least intelligent lyrics penned by heavy metal bands (yes, they do exist!). Here goes.

"Maybe, it's not to late, to learn how to love and forget how to hate" — from the song "Crazy Train" by the prime PMRC target Ozzy Osbourne. Yes, he's pissed on the Alamo, he's bitten off a bat's head, but hey we've all got our strange quirks.

"What do you mean I don't believe in God, talk to him every day? What do you mean I don't support your system, I go to court when I have to? What do you mean I can't get to work on time, got nothing better to do? If there's a new way, I'll be the first in line, but it better work this time." — from the song "Peace Sells, But Who's Buying?" by Megadeth.

"Television, the idiot tube, helps to raise our children as fools. Watch the news see what they want you to see, our awareness is limited by network VPs. Moronic sitcoms and one-sided news alter your feeling, give you conformist views. Why can't you get that garbage out of your head. You'd be better off to read a good book instead." — from the song "Brainwashed" by the outspoken guys of Nuclear Assault.

"Blackened is the end. Winter it will send. Throwing all you see into obscurity. Death of mother earth, never a rebirth," — from the song "Blackened" by an enviromentally conscious Metallica.

"White man came across the sea. He brought us pain and misery. He killed our tribes, he killed our creed," — from the song "Run to the Hills," the Native American version of the birth of America, by Iron Maiden.

"Politicians say no to drugs, while we pay for wars in South America. Fighting fire with empty words, while the banks get fat, and the poor stay poor, and the cops get paid to look away while the one percent rules America," — from the song "Spreading the Disease" by Queensryche.

This is just the tip of the iceberg. Metal is not just noise and screams, it's emotion and power and concern for what's going on with the human race. The reason I like this music so much is that these musicians actually care about the lyrics and sound that they put together. They don't arbitrarily throw together a song that is guaranteed to sell millions of copies. You can feel the effort that is put into the songs, or at least I can.

I guess my point is that before you judge heavy metal, make sure you're familiar with the music before you make an ignorant judgement.

Communist party chief in China remembers first student protest

BEIJING (AP) — Communist Party chief Jiang Zemin gave a qualified vote of confidence Thursday to the loyalty of China's students at a rally commemorating the country's first student protest in 1919.

"Young intellectuals as a whole are good and can be trusted," he told 3,000 youths invited to hear him in the Great Hall of the People.

But much of his speech, intended to honor the student protesters of May 4, 1919, condemned students who protested last year with the same demands for democracy.

"They bound themselves with foreign hostile forces and conducted activities harmful to the motherland," the official Xinhua News Agency quoted Jiang as saying. "They lost all sense of national dignity and personal dignity. What qualifications do they have to talk about patriotism, democracy and human rights?"

The May 4, 1919 protest by a few thousand college students at Tiananmen Gate in Beijing is one of the major events in modern Chinese history. The protesters' demands for democracy and modernization sparked an intellectual movement that helped produce the Communist revolution.

The movement also inspired later generations of students to political activism, including last year's protester, "May 4th!" was a rallying cry of the tens of thousands of students who marched through Beijing streets last April and May to the same spot as in 1919 - Tiananmen Square.

Jian praised the 1919 movement as a "great anti-imperialism and anti-feudalism movement as well as a mind-opening and new cultural movement in pursuit of democracy and science." But he said patriotism in the 1990s should be expressed through "devotion to building and safeguarding the cause of socialist modernization."

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES(March 21-April 19): You have an idea that needs to be explored right now. Something good is about to happen. Resist the temptation to make a job change. A young person is very impressionable.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20): Make this a day of great achievements. You could gain an important management position. Show those who count that you are both responsible and unflappable.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20): Reach out to someone who needs a gentle nudge in the right direction. Romance deserves a second chance. Watch out for a co-worker who has an inflated notion of your personal wealth.

CANCER(Jun 21-July 22): Morning is the best time to ask the boss for a favor. If you set the pace, others will fall into step. Even a competitor welcomes back someone who has been away.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22): Present your ideas to someone in a position of real influence. You make an excellent first impression on a new staff member. Partner agrees to become more involved in business.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22): Stubbornness could get you in trouble with those who do not know you well. Energy and enthusiasm will help you correct a bad habit. A young member of the opposite sex is very impressed.

LIBRA(Setp.23-Oct.22): Be prepared for a new burden to be dropped on you today. If you handle it with flair, job advancement will be even more rapid than you hope. Give romance a second chance.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21): Your whirlwind pace continues. Job interviews go well for those who have done their homework. Ask pertinent questions. Certain financial restrictions are relaxed. Take a calculated risk.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21): Seize an opportunity to enlarge your role at your place of employment. A member of the opposite sex tries to distract you, but you may not be interested. Keep angry outbursts under control

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19): Preserve you and your loved ones dignity. Turn down an offer that has too many strings attached. Jealousy could seriously harm romance. Have a candid but calm conversation about your feelings.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18): Strike while you have the upperhand at work. Your associates give you their full support if you do not dillydally. Partner or mate demands more of your time. Adopt a new approach.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20): Be more diplomatic with a colleague who feels that you are being jumped ahead of him. You will need his support in the future. Go easy on someone who once wronged you.

semifinal game against Penn when, on a restart from the end line, he sprinted toward the net, leaped in the air and dunked the ball underneath the crossbar. He repeated the stunt in a game last season.

Understand that this is not the first publication to speak highly of the Gaits. In the past month, they have been featured by the New York Times, Sports Illustrated, USA Today, and People Magazine.

So far this season, Gary leads the team in scoring with 47 points (29 goals, 18 assists) and Paul is second (20-25-45). But those numbers are watered down a bit when you consider that the two are often out of the game by halftime.

The twins hail from British Columbia, as does sophomore attack Tom Marechek (25-14-39, third on the team). Senior attack Greg Burns (27-9-36) can also scorch the net.

But the Orange can kill you with other facets of the game, namely faceoffs. Senior Kirk Pratt often drives opponents into the ground (it isn't such an easy thing to do on turf), winning 102 of his 174 draws for a .586 percentage of success.

Defensively, SU has defied the logic of the increased offense by allowing only nine goals a game. Goaltender Matt Palumb is out with a knee injury suffered in a win over Hobart, but sophomore Lee Hine hasn't lost a beat as his replacement.

It will be a tough task for UMass to overcome the Orangemen. If the Gorillas have any hope of winning, they will have to avoid getting into a running game with 'Cuse, or else it'll be over almost as fast as it starts.

The Gorillas will have to control the tempo, which won't be easy with the Syracuse defense and its ability to win faceoffs.

Gorilla Grumblings: If there was a way of finding this out earlier, we'd deliver it to you sooner. But it was discovered yesterday that senior attack Rob Codignotto was named New England Player-of-the-Week for last week's play.

Elsewhere on the home front, junior attack Jim McAleavey was second in the nation last week in points per game (71 in 11 games) and assists per game (44 in 11 games), figures that look even better after scoring six goals and 11 assists in two games this week.

McAleavey is zeroing in on the season scoring record. His 88 points (33 goals, 55 assists) are second behind Jim Weller, who had 98 in 1981. McAleavey is also second in career assists (132) and third in season assists (55).

Other players on the move up the ladder are senior attack Scott Hiller (tied for second in career goals — 134; fifth in career points — 189) and Codignotto (eighth in season goals — 45).

Maybe the Gaits are dominating the ink, but look for a story on UMass coach Dick Garber and his 300 career wins in the Boston Globe on Sunday.

second and third, from where they would score on a double by Lisa Paccione.

Holly Aprile came in to pitch and held Providence scoreless until the Lady Friars got a two-out single and triple in the seventh.

UMass scored its only run in the fourth with singles by Stacey Nichols, Mary Duff and Amy Cockley.

The Minutewomen play Rutgers Saturday in a doubleheader that will determine the final A-10 seedings for the A-10 tournament that will be held at Totman Field next weekend.

SPORTS

UMass easily wins Battle of Amherst

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

When the University of Massachusetts baseball team beat Springfield College 21-6, it was thought that this would be the team's last blowout of the season.

What was forgotten was that Amherst College was on the schedule. The Minutemen rocked the local boys 17-3 in closing out the home season, and in so doing sent Amherst home with its sixth loss of the season.

The Lord Jeffs resembled a bad Little League team dressed in fancy purple uniforms. This squad opened the first inning in true Little League fashion with three errors by the infield.

The Minutemen stole home twice, once in the first, and once in the fourth. In the first, with Mike Tobin on third and Steve Corradi at first, Corradi broke for second and Tobin for home. Amherst proceeded to run Corradi back and fourth between first and second, which allowed Tobin to rush home. The Minutemen worked this Little League type play to perfection not once but twice.

UMass added a run in the third when Dan Biagini doubled home Derek Dana (single). In the fourth the Minutemen exploded for six runs, pushing the score to 10-0. Corradi (4-for-5, three stolen bases) singled, stole second and third and scored on a wild pitch.

Ian Torres walked, stole second and third and also scored on a wild pitch. Brian Bright singled, swiped second and scored on Dana's single. Glenn DiSarcina ripped a single which plated Dana and then, Dan Biagini stroked a two-run-homer, his second of the season.

UMass tortured Amherst on the base paths, as the Minutemen stole seven bases and were not caught once. The Lord Jeffs made each Minuteman player look like Rickey Henderson.

Scott Meaney took care of the Lord Jeffs on offense. Meaney hurled five shutout innings and picked up his fifth win of the season. Rich Graham relieved Meaney and pitched three strong innings, striking out five. Although Graham allowed three runs, he pitched well.

The Minutemen scored another five runs in what could be considered garbage time. Tom Murray, Dave Edwards (3-for-5), Joe Riggi and Drew Comeau all doubled in the sixth inning.

After Comeau hit his season-high 18th double, UMass coach Mike Stone called on Keith Richards to pinch-run for the senior first basmen who holds several school hitting records for a season including homers and doubles. Comeau headed off the field to a standing ovation from the fans around Lorden Field. It was the final home game ever for Comeau, and his teammates welcomed him off the field at the top of the dugout with high-fives.

In all the Minutemen pounded out 20 hits in an impressive hitting performance. UMass is now 24-17, the Lord Jeffs are 18-6. If Amherst continues to play sloppy baseball they will struggle to win games against other Division III schools. Playing the type of ball that Amherst played yesterday will certainly not get them many wins against division I teams like UMass.

The Minutemen look as focused as they have all season. They're playing heads-up baseball. It appears that they are into the game mentally on every pitch. With the playoffs rolling around, the Minutemen have picked an opportune time to mesh.

Softball splits pair against Providence

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Staff

So much for luck.

After the University of Massachusetts softball team won two games against Rhode Island Wednesday by the seat of their pants, it seemed that they could win just about any game they needed too simply by rubbing their lucky rabbits foot, pulling out their four leaf clover and wearing their rally caps.

But yesterday the Minutewomen saw their luck run out as the Providence Lady Friars managed a split with the home team, losing the first game 1-0 and rebounding in the second 4-1.

"You can talk about being lucky, but you've got to be lucky and good to win," said UMass coach Elaine Sortino.

In the first game Holly Aprile pitched yet another one-hitter as she kept the Lady Friars off balance throughout, striking out six and pitching her second shutout in as many games. She also had a single, double and a triple at the plate.

UMass scored the only run of the game in the fourth when Laurie Dondarski walked with one out. Dawn Albert pinch-ran for Dondarski and scored on a close play at the plate as Aprile doubled into left-center and went to third on the throw home.

The Minutewomen threatened to score more runs as Cherie DellAnno walked, bringing up Chris Collins with runners at the corners and still only one out. Collins laid down a bunt but Aprile was out at the plate.

And that was the offense in the first game.

In the second game the Lady Friars got on the board early as Jennifer Finley singled to lead off and was sacrificed to second. Heather LaDuke moved Finley to third with a single of her own.

Karen McQuillen grounded to second, but with the runner at third a little far off the bag, Jen Miller attempted to pick her off. Her throw sailed past Dondarski, Finley scoring and the runners moving to

Top-ranked Syracuse next for Gorillas

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team may be playing as well as it has all year during this stretch run.

And it's a good thing, because the Gorillas face their biggest test of the season Sunday when they travel to Syracuse, N.Y. to take on a true juggernaut in Syracuse University.

How good is Syracuse (9-0)? Suffice to say that teams don't very often win consecutive national championships by fluke nature. The Orange hasn't lost a game since the beginning of last season, when Johns Hopkins knocked it off. Since then it's been 23 straight wins, and not many of them have been close.

One that was close ranks up there as one of the best lacrosse games ever played on this campus. The Orangemen came to Amherst as heavy favorites, and everyone expected UMass to be just another team to step on in the path to the national title.

Surprise. After jumping out to a 7-1 lead, the bewildered Orangemen had to hang on for dear life as the Gorillas rallied furiously, falling just short, 10-9.

This season's new rules have made top-ranked SU an awesome presence on offense. Not too many people give UMass any chance in this game, but all they have to do is be reminded of what happened at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium last year.

There is no disputing the power of Syracuse over the past few seasons. Coach Roy Simmons, Jr. says his club may be the best lacrosse team ever. A pretty strong statement, but one that more than a few experts have supported.

And in the CarrierDome, the Orangemen are even tougher. The Orange has lost there only three times since it opened. Cornell (1981 and 1987) and Cortland (1982) are the only teams to come out of there with a win.

On the road, SU isn't much worse. But it does shows some signs of vulnerability. Take the latest outing against Penn (last Saturday at Franklin Field in Philadelphia). The Quakers actually had an 11-8 lead with 11 minutes left in the game.

However, Syracuse showed just how dangerous and explosive it is, knocking home four goals in a span of 39 seconds and eventually coming away with a 15-12 win.

Sunday's game was moved into the CarrierDome after it was originally scheduled for tomorrow at Coyne Field, an outdoor facility that seats only 5,000 (the Dome holds 10 times that amount).

The reason given was that, with this being the last home game of the regular season and with graduation also being held this weekend, a HUGE crowd is expected.

Most of those in attendance will most likely be there to pay tribute to a pair of senior identical twins who'll be playing in their last home game against UM.

When the comparisons of great teams are made, the talk centers around Gary and Paul Gait, who some consider the best lacrosse players of all-time. They have been credited with revolutionizing the game with behind-the-back shots, between-the-legs passing, and a maneuver which has been called "Air Gait."

Two years ago, Gary stunned the world in the NCAA

March stirs pride and controversy

UM students join 3,000 in Gay and Lesbian Pride March

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON – More than 20 members of the University of Massachusetts Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Alliance, along with members of the Lesbian, Bisexual Women's Union, joined an estimated 3,000 marchers on Saturday for the ninth annual Gay and Lesbian Pride March.

Many who were attending the rally wore red arm bands in protest of the exclusion of the word "bisexual" from the march title for the first time in the march's nine-year history.

Lis Brook, a member of the march committee, said the decision to drop "bisexual" from the march title was based on the committee's desire to broaden the scope of the march beyond sexual preference. The march committee also released a statement of position which said the omission of "bisexual" from the title was a statement of affiliation, not rejection.

Members of the LBGA carried pro-bisexual banners to protest the exclusion of the word from the march along with many other marchers and spectators.

The march began near Lampoon Park at noon and proceeded down Bridge Street and State Street to Pulanski Park. According to organizers, it was the "kick off to the gay pride season across the country."

Virginia Appuzzo, deputy commissioner of the New York State Consumer Protection Board and Governor's vice-chair of New York State AIDS Advisory Council, said the struggle for gay and lesbian rights has been the result of the strong will and strong dedication of the gay community.

"Twenty-one years ago this country found out that limp wrists can also become clenched fists," she said.

The struggle for gay and lesbian rights was begun by a group of drag queens in New York City, Appuzzo said, but has moved into various stages through the years. She said the gay and lesbian movement has reached a crucial point in 1990.

"We've never needed each other more than we need each other now. The community is facing an epidemic of humiliation from all sides," she said.

In the past, the gay and lesbian movement has been "critical" in working for women's rights and developing a plan of action against the AIDS epidemic, but Appuzzo said the rest of society needs to change as well.

"What we share is what is most valuable to us all, our lives," she said. "Everyday we are threatened by convention, which unjustly robs us of our determination."

Kevin Cathcart, an attorney and executive director of Gay and Lesbian Advocates and Defenders (GLAD), said although the gay and lesbian community has a great deal to celebrate, there are still a great many problems the community faces.

After five years, the gay and lesbian community finally won back the right to care for foster children in Massachusetts in addition to the "incredible" effort that led to the passage of the Gay and Lesbian Rights Bill last November, he said.

"We are beginning to change the myths and preconceptions that homosexuals are awful people, the state [of Massachusetts] has even acknowledged they were wrong," he said.

Hillel calls for awareness of anti-Semitism in USSR

By JULIA SEREBRINSKY
Collegian Correspondent

A rally sponsored by the University of Massachusetts Hillel Foundation Friday called for a greater awareness of anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union and an increased student activism in curbing all forms of oppression.

The rally was staged on the eve of a scheduled pogrom (an organized mass violence against Jews) to be held throughout the Soviet Union. Rumors that the Russian nationalist group Pamyat was calling for a nationwide pogrom on May 5 started circulating several months ago.

At UMass, a small crowd gathered in front of the Student Union steps where seven speakers urged students to petition the U.S. government to intervene on behalf of Soviet Jews, pointing out that the anti-Semitic fervor in the Soviet Union is reminiscent of the early years of Hitler's rule in Germany.

"Today we [Americans] are being faced with a similar situation,"said Hillel President Randi Dubno. "We must take an active role to assure the safety of our brothers."

Alisa Meshenberg, an economics sophomore at UMass said that "people [Soviet Jews] are scared for their lives," and urged students to "join in before it is too late."

Group comes to aid of cats

Provides homes for and education about cats

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

A group of Amherst residents are trying to reduce the large population of some 1,000 stray cats in the Amherst area through foster home placement and pet owner education.

Alice Fox, a group organizer, said most people do not understand enough about animals to realize that cats cannot survive without human care and need to be spayed or neutered.

"Some people will put their cat outside to give it a 'running start.'" Fox said. "They are trying to ease their conscience, but the reality is that their cat is going to die a slow and painful death."

Fox said people assume that if they abandon their cat, then someone will find and take care of it. However, Amherst Animal Shelter only takes care of dogs and the Greenfield shelter is full of animals and is not taking in anymore, she said.

She added that the MSCAP in Springfield is putting to sleep immediately any animals turned in to them because their facilities are full as well.

"People think that if they dump their cat, someone will take care of it, but there are no shelters in this area that can take in cats at this time." Fox said.

Fox said she is in the process of removing some 40 cats that have been abandoned in a barn in South Deerfield. She said it is a myth that barns are the ideal living quarters for cats.

"A barn is the worst place for a large number of cats," she said. "The cats pass

A safe spring concert on the pond

One stage crew member hurt but no major injuries reported

By LAVINIA GAMMON
Collegian Staff

A steel scaffolding beam came crashing down on the head of Kristen Haimes, a pond concert stage crew member last Friday, as she was helping set up the stage for the Spring Pond Concert yesterday.

Haimes suffered a minor concussion and was taken to Cooley Dickinson hospital, where she was treated and released an hour after the accident.

"She was awake and talking when she went into the ambulance. The worst was avoided," said John McGovern, co-production manager for the Union Program Council.

Haimes was hit when two UPC stage crew members let go of the beam to assist a fellow worker. Both students believed the other was still holding the beam.

"It was just a case of two people running off and both leaving the piece to fall. We each thought the other had it," said Tammy Adams, a UPC stage crew member.

According to McGovern, there has not been an accident during stage set up of the spring concerts in many years.

RELATED STORY ON PAGE 9

"We usually have a very clean record. Nothing like this has happened for as long as I've worked for UPC," said McGovern, who has worked with UPC for two and a half years.

Nader to lecture at UMass

Consumer rights advocate to speak about activism in '90s

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

Ralph Nader, often referred to as the founder of the consumer rights movement in the United States, is scheduled to lecture on Wednesday at 8 p.m. in the Bowker Auditorium.

Nader, who has lectured for years on the importance of higher education, will be speaking on "Student Activism and Higher Education in the 90s."

In October 1989, Nader spoke at UMass on "Budget Cuts in Education" as part of the Distinguished Visitors Program.

Nader gained his reputation in 1965 when he took on the American automobile industry with his book Unsafe at Any Speed: The Designed-In Dangers of the American Automobile.

The book, which attacked the Chevrolet Corvair and questioned the safety of many other cars, helped start a movement to make seat belts a standard safety feature.

Nader activism has spawned hundreds of consumer action groups throughout the country, including the highly-visible Public Interest Research Group organization, which in Massachusetts has pushed environmental causes.

In 1988, Nader led a successful movement to defeat a 50 percent Congressional pay raise by encouraging voters to speak out against the raise. He is also pushing for air bags in cars, a safety device he has praised for 20 years.

Nader's consumer focus in the 1990s is on insurance reform on the national level, greater auto safety regulations and a reform of government into a business-like atmosphere.

He has also begun speaking out on product liability, food additives and pollutants.

Nader, 55, is a native of Winsted, Connecticut. He graduated magna cum laude from Princeton University's Wilson School of Public and International Affairs, and went on to become editor of the Harvard Law Record while attending Harvard Law School.

Nader's visit is sponsored by the Commuter Area Government.

TV show leads to tips on suspect

BOSTON (AP) — Hundreds of people across the country who saw a crime television show this week called in tips on a suspect police believe is responsible for a spree of rapes and robberies in Massachusetts.

One man in Braintree, who saw "Unsolved Mysteries" on a television while shopping in an electronics store, drove straight to the Norwood police station to turn in his neighbor. Others called to say they thought they had met the man in a singles bar, or that he was their veterinarian.

The suspect, known as the strip-mall rapist because he preys on female workers in malls, is believed responsible for Christmastime rapes in Boston, Braintree, Framingham, Brockton, Norwood and robberies in Dedham and Saugus.

viruses in between each other and are sometimes killed violently by people who are sick of having cats in their barns."

Many irresponsible pet owners also leave their cats to starve to death in their dormitories or apartments when they move out, she said.

"People should really consider if they are settled and responsible enough to have a pet," she said. "Pets aren't something cute and disposable to play with. They are dependent on humans to take care of them."

Fox said she is concerned that many students will leave their cats at the end of this semester. She said a good number of cats were left in rooms to starve to death three years ago in Southwest Residential Area. To prevent this from happening again, she said she plans to have "pet watches" check the dorms for pets once the students leave.

"I don't understand how people can have pets for the company and then mistreat them," she said. "A pet is not a toy but an animal that will be dependent on a human for some 15 years."

National Guard pitches in to help city recycle

Local tactical fighter group helps Westfield

WESTFIELD (AP) — City officials fighting to keep up with recycling deadlines got some help from an unexpected quarter when the Air National Guard decided to pitch in.

"The response from the residents was so overwhelming, we called out the guard," Barry Searle, recycling coordinator, joked Thursday. "We were fortunate to have them here and they were nice enough to help out."

The problem arose Monday when health department officials realized they could not meet schedules for the new recycling system, under which residents separate paper, glass and metal trash to be taken to a regional recycling facility in Springfield.

Westfield, like many other western Massachusetts cities, started the recycling program this spring as part of the state-run Materials Recycling Facility in Springfield. Cities truck in the separated trash which is then bundled and crushed into materials that can be sold to manufacturers.

Searle said no one expected that more than 90 percent of residents would start putting separated trash out on the curb.

Then, when some truck drivers called in sick this week, the city faced the prospect of trash piling up, he said.

Col. Alan Reid of the 104th Tactical Fighter Group stationed at Barnes Airport here said he heard of the problem through Mayor George Varelas.

"When I realized there was in fact an impending crisis, I suggested that perhaps we could help them out. After several meetings we decided that we could put several trucks out there with volunteer guardsmen and probably get the city caught up by just taking care of paper alone," Reid said.

Volunteer guardsmen have picked up paper throughout the city all week and plan to finish up Friday, he said.

The exercise doesn't exactly mirror the official calling out of the guard, which can only be done by the governor in a state of emergency, Reid said.

"This is more of a goodwill gesture," he said. "It was not hard at all. "They're quite happy to be helping the city out. We live here, our airport operates here. It's kind of a mutual admiration society."

Ilya Mirman, a Soviet immigrant, speaks at the Soviet-Jewry rally on the Student Union steps.

Some of the speakers said that the anti-Semitism currently flourishing in the Soviet Union manifests a historically repetitive occurrence of scapegoating.

"Jews in the Soviet Union have been used as scapegoats at the low points of economy," said Ilya Mirman, a Jewish emigre from the Soviet Union and a UMass mechanical engineering junior. "The Soviet Union today is on the verge of an economic collapse.
Once again Jews are being used as scapegoats."

Mark Adler, a UMass junior in history, said that the public demonstrations in the Soviet Union, sanctioned under the policy of glasnost, have become platforms through which nationalist groups vent their anti-Semitism, expressing "anger about decades of Communist rule" and "blaming Jews for bringing Communism."

Some speakers said that bigotry and anti-Semitism do not exist in the Soviet Union exclusively.

"Anti-Semitism does not only exist in Russia," said Dubno.

"You don't have to look further than UMass," she said, referring to the recent incident involving three UMass students who received anonymous anti-Semitic notes.

Speakers asked the students to help alleviate pressure and threats of violence faced by Soviet Jews by becoming involved in a letter-writing campaign to President George Bush, Secretary of State James Baker and U.S. representatives.

Currently, the UMass Hillel Foundation is circling petitions for President Bush and Secretary Baker to "convince the Soviet authorities not to allow violent anti-Semitic activity to flourish under the umbrella of Soviet reform."

■ rally in Northampton

Cathcart said these developments face potential problems by Massachusetts budget difficulties. Although the state has passed the Gay and Lesbian Rights Bill, he said the state has no money to enforce it.

"The Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination has laid off half of their employees since January," he said. "The law is meaningless if it's not enforced."

Another threat to the bill is a proposed referendum which would override the bill if passed this November. He said the referendum is currently being debated in the Massachusetts Judicial Court as to its legality.

"The gay community shouldn't only join together when we arc facing a crisis from the right wing," he said. "We should work together continually to achieve our goals."

Mary Ford, Northampton City Council president, said she is proud of the diversity in her community and the contributions the gay community has made to Northampton.

"We have been working closely with the gay community to ensure Northampton is a diverse and safe community," she said.

■ concert injuries

LaBranche was called to the scene, but said there was nothing to investigate. He said it was a minor accident and no one was seriously injured.

Apart from Friday's accident, UPC security reported the pond concert went fairly smoothly. Jean Carroll, a security person said, "Overall, the whole concert was a success, but afterward, I wish the people had been more polite. Some were kind of rude."

The UMass Fire and First Aid Unit was on hand yesterday to ensure safe and fast treatment of any injuries. According to the Unit's co-president Jessica Townsend, no major injuries were reported.

Townsend said one student required medical assistance when he cut his knee mud-sliding near the pond. A 23-year-old male was reported to have suffered heat stroke, but the student refused medical attention. He was given a glass of water and then he returned to the concert.

A woman, aggravating an already 'bad knee' by dancing furiously, was treated by the First Aid Unit. A man who had experienced a previous bicycle injury, which was still bleeding yesterday, sought assistance from the Unit as well. Townsend said a woman was also treated for a bee sting.

James Kokermak, vice-president of the Unit said there were additional injuries.

A 26-year-old male was treated for a sprained ankle and so was a 22-year-old male. Several people were treated for cuts on their arms, toes, hands and knees. Kokermak said a 21-year-old female experienced second-degree burns from a candle.

"Considering the amount of people and the fact that minimal alcohol was involved, it wasn't that bad at all. It was generally a very safe concert," he said.

UMASS SUMMER SESSION
University of Massachusetts at Amherst
Summer 1990
Your invitation to a brilliant future.
Over 200 credit courses are shining at UMass this summer.
A dazzling array of classes is conveniently offered both day and evening in two, six-week sessions. Now is the time to satisfy a requirement or take that special course you haven't had time for in the past. Finish a two-semester course in just 12 weeks. First session runs from June 5 -July 13; second session runs from July 17 -August 23. Some courses also have variable dates to fit into your summer plans. Registration starts April 17. Register by phone (545-3653) through June 1. Register by mail through May 18. Or just walk in and register through June 4.
For more information or a free course catalog, call the Division of Continuing Education at 545-2414.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted

This semester's last Notes from the Campus Center Basement

"And now the end is near . . . but I did it my way . . ." I really don't know the words to that song but it does represent how I feel about the past five years of life here at UMass, and especially the three I have spent writing these opinions.

I found it incredible so many people have fought with me about what is "right" to write. Surprisingly, it has been the left who has demanded that I, and the rest of the paper, print "socially correct" things — it would seem they prefer Stalinism to freedom.

Don't get me wrong. The right has done some horrible things too, but being a liberal (and PROUD of it) has been hard here because even the University has encouraged its students to ignore reality and favor a rose-colored version of life. This is not to say that we shouldn't try to make the world a better place, but if we don't look at the world as it is, how can things change?

So to kick off my version of the 1990 Graduating Class' Will, I leave the University and the far-leftists a slap in the face with some reality — you all really need it.

To Housing I leave a whole new system of administration, one that is more concerned with the quality of life for the students than the image of being "one of the best residence systems in the country." The director would be gone as would the East and West side coordinators. Instead, housing would be run by a staff that reported to the five area coordinators and five student representatives, one from each area, with tie votes being broken by a professional staff member. The plan could save some money too since the staff wouldn't be paid as much as the people now are.

For the SAO I would do the same — cut your staff and replace the present people with ones who were there to help student empowerment. These people would not just take close to a third of the SATF fees to administer fewer RSOs than ever before with the largest staff and budget ever.

Peter Leon

To the Senate I leave this motion which would clear up some lingering problems: "I move to suspend the rules in order to consider a motion to amend the SGA constitution to allow co-presidents so that a motion can be made to finally ratify the elections of March 1988." Oh geez, I forgot a State Court has already recognized the Silkoff/Rabinowitz presidency. It would seem our Senate thinks it is above a court order as they still contend Silkoff/Rabinowitz were never in office.

To the conservatives I tip my hat for your stamina. Doesn't everyone agree it must take a lot of strength to always be wrong!

To UPC, WMUA and UVC I leave the budget and equipment you so rightly deserve. These are some of the few RSOs that are for all students, bringing entertainment and learning for those involved.

To the Collegian, well first is gratitude for all I have learned here. Second, for the business office I leave lots of advertisers, and ones who pay on time. To the newsroom, more talented people and a desperately-needed new computer system. For graphics, the best late-night party Sunday through Thursday, and I leave patience and understanding and that page-one filler when it's 1:00 a.m. and the writer and night editor are still arguing about the last story.

Finally, for all my friends who have made the past five years so amazing and special, I leave this melodramatic mushy quote:

Now I've had the time of my life, and I owe it all to you!
— y'all know who.

Have a great life everyone, cuz as Dennis Miller says, "I'M OUTTA HERE!!!!"

Peter Leon is a former Collegian columnist, and presently an unemployed person desperately seeking a job. Anyone know of any?

Will the diploma remember?

Some months ago I asked Lisa P., a 1989 college graduate, where she put her diploma.

"It's still rolled up in that red satin ribbon I got it in. At least until I move into my own office and frame it."

What was this? It was not on display already? Had she not even peered in between the folds of the sacred scroll to see her name and her degree?

Alise Harfield

Why not frame it now, I thought. Months ago I began contemplating what kind I'd choose: a classy, black frame with gold trim? A 10K gold-filled scalloped? A funky glow-in-the-dark crimson? Or, alas, would it end up where my budget placed it: inside a plain, plastic lucite so that one day, I'd look at it from a swivel office chair and read, Alise S. Harfield, B.A., May 27, 1990.

That's it, nothing else. No major, no minor, no memory. The diploma would be the only receipt of the past 4 years in college, a slip of laid paper and ink, a date, an official stamp. It wouldn't even depict my best decision, becoming an English major.

Gaze at it all I want, it won't ever reveal the commanding view I had from my first dorm room, a triple on the sixth floor that looked onto the clock tower in Durham, NH, or the narrow, winding brook I'd stand above en route to freshman English, the professor of my first college course (Psych 401, 9:30 a.m. Tuesday-Thursday), the columns of Social Security numbers on 8 by 10 papers posted too high for me to discern which grade was mine, the 49 out of 50?.

Or the 12?

The framed paper won't expose the pain my finger felt after blackening with a number 2 soft lead pencil the 100 answers of the Zoology 400 test, or the sensation on my back of probing TA's eyes to ensure no one of us 300 were cheating (how could we? The teacher gave 2 copies of the same test. They never did that in classes of 25 in high school).

Nor can the diploma on the wall announce to onlookers how I've felt these past four years. Nausea, tummy pain, headache — the wine-cooler weekend at a fraternity toga party (we all make mistakes)! Elation, joy, vigor! — chicken fingers at the dining hall, a semester's grades above average, a U2 concert, a date with someone special. Aggravation, frustration, disappointment — preparing for finals, breaking out in hives, pulling an all-nighter, flunking a surprise quiz, discovering a boyfriend in a closet (not by himself).

And the inanimate diploma will never be able to duplicate any of the sounds from which it came, the sounds of campus: the GONG at the top of the hour from the steeple that, no matter how heavy the monsoon, would remain erect and chiming every 15 minutes, the ring of the phone at 1 a.m., (Pizza's downstairs!), and at 7 a.m., ("This is Michele's dad. Is she home yet?"), the blast of Floyd on CD to which I'd retaliate with a spin of vinyl Rolling Stones, the relieving roar of the PVTA bus to take me home or to an awaiting buddy.

Sadly, I won't be able to press my ear to the glass frame and hear any professors'-of-old voices in lecture, discussion or conference, raving about the decapitation of English kings or explaining why my chosen metaphor has no place in an essay.

It is just as well that the framed 11 by 14 will never bring to nose those scents I've tried to forget over the years: the refreshing "before" smell of beer, the disgusting smell of "after" beer, the unmistakable aroma of both in regurgitated beer — in elevators, bathrooms, windows. Or, the more pleasant aromas of the dining hall ("What is this, Italian month?"), or the first lilac of spring that lured us out of class and onto grass.

No, the diploma I'll frame will never bare such memories.

Such thoughts, I guess, will remain in a different frame — a frame of mind.

Just another sappy ending

"Maybe you should just keep your mouth shut. No matter what you say in your final column it'll sound trite."

"True. I refuse to write one of those sappy, farewell columns. How about if I ask the editors to give me 60 lines of blank space?"

"I don't think they'll go for it. Already been done."

Bob Bobala

"Then what should I say?"

"Just don't try to give advice on how to survive UMass."

"Please. I'd rather try to sneak 60 blank lines past the copy editor. What makes you think I've got advice to give anyway? I made this show up as I went along. I survived UMass by accident."

"I'll say."

"People come. People go. I just happen to be going."

"An insignificant cog in a complex machine."

"That's right."

"Well, Mr. Insignificant Cog, you have 40 lines left to say something important. So get to it."

"If I haven't said anything important in three years of writing for this paper, do you think I'm going to start now?"

"I suppose that would be too much to ask."

"Damn right it would. Keep your life as insignificant and trivial as possible — that's my motto."

"So, you survived UMass by never doing or saying anything meaningful?"

"That, and frequent trips to the Durfee Conservatory (the greenhouse near Health Services) have helped. Along with watching sunsets from the back of Tobin Hall. And, of course, I can't forget the guys at PC Maintenance in the bowels of Goodell. If they didn't fix my computer, this writer would have flunked out of school long ago."

"So, they're the ones to blame?"

"You could say that. But watch it. We're getting sappy."

"Right. You're running out of space, too. You'd better get serious."

"I refuse to get serious. What do you want me to do, reflect on life? I came here not understanding life and I leave here not understanding life. Now, I only ask more questions about it. For some strange reason I feel good about that. But I refuse to talk about something so serious."

"You'd rather just spew a few rambling, incoherent thoughts for 60 lines, like you're doing?"

"It's better than trying to describe the feelings of horror and excitement riding on the Graduation Express with me. Why let people know I'm an emotional guy? I'd rather keep up the insignificant cog charade."

"And you're doing that so well. But any final words?"

"What do you want me to say? You want me to say that I have absolutely no regrets about spending the past four years here? That these really have been the best years of my life? That they've also been the worst years? The best of times, the worst of times, but certainly the greatest of times? Well, I won't do it. I refuse to be a sap and say that."

"Fine."

"You want me to say how thankful I am to everybody who's read what I've written over three years? You want me to say how I'll miss all this? You want me to say good-bye? Well, forget it. I won't do it. I absolutely refuse to make this one of those sappy, farewell columns."

Graduate demands for 'neutrality pledge' an attack on free speech

The Collegian deserves congratulations for its generally careful and very timely coverage of the negotiations between the Graduate Employee Organization (GEO) and the campus administration. Even though I am faculty and therefore an interested party, I would like to make a few comments.

The Declaration of Independence states that the Creator endows men with the inalienable rights of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Article I of the Constitution defines freedom of speech as a specific right of liberty.

With these thoughts in mind, I quote the April 27 article by Preston P. Forman on the GEO negotiation: "(GEO negotiating committee member Marc) Kenen said the GEO. . . has insisted that administrators sign a 'pledge of neutrality.' The neutrality agreement would forbid administrators, faculty members and all supervisory staff from advocating for or against a union."

This demand from the GEO tells me a great deal about the character of its leadership. It tells me that they want to impose censorship on thousands of University workers for the sake of what the GEO sees to be conditions necessary for a "fair" election.

This "fair" election must be unpolluted by the (unquestionably!) contaminated opinions of faculty members such as myself, who may end up having no choice but to abide by the terms of an agreement negotiated by a group they were forbidden to criticize before it came to power.

I applaud the administration for refusing to submit to this blatant attempt to abridge my right of free speech.

This flagrant attack on my liberty arises from the same philosophy that guided Nicolai Ceausescu in the conduct of his "free" elections in Romania. In Ceausescu's mind, it wasn't "fair" to criticize what he had done, so he sacrificed the inconvenient principle of free speech in order to realize his version of fairness.

But what he did was wrong, and what GEO wants in connection with restricting my right to speak out about them is wrong.

From Bucharest to Amherst, the principle is the same: restricting a fundamental freedom to serve any human's idea of "fairness" is always wrong.

Spring Concert 1990: our day in the sun

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

It's the end of the year and exams loom ahead, that paper is due tomorrow, you've called every friend you haven't spoken to since August, attended every party you possibly can, and now you're ready to start furiously studying, right? No possible way if you were in possession of your senses yesterday.

A breezy, sunny afternoon found 10-12,000 people at the UPC-sponsored Spring Pond Concert dancing, sunning and putting off what they can do some other day to enjoy the music they love.

Oklahoma's Hearts and Minds opened to a small crowd around noon. Fortunately, they were not on stage very long. The beat may have been incredible, but some lyrics were dangerous and degrading to women. At one point, the lead singer indicated the words to a song he was singing ("Does the collar match the cuff?") were about whether a blonde woman's hair matched her pubic hair. Many individuals in the crowd took offense and shouted back.

Throwing Muses took the stage next; the crowd had grown to a meager 300. Lead singer Kristin Hersh felt a chill and someone from the audience threw her a sweatshirt. The Muses were a lot more energetic than usual.

By 3 p.m., the sun was beating down on the lawn-turned-concert-ground and scores of people began to emerge from studying, working, sleeping and partying to hear the sounds of Queen Latifah. But she had travelled to Amherst, N.Y., thinking that the University of Massachusetts was in Amherst N.Y., not Massachusetts. So the Violent Femmes played their set next to a grateful and ecstatic crowd of close to 7,000, while Queen Latifah travelled from Buffalo, N.Y. to Amherst, Mass.

Gordon Gano, lead singer of the Femmes let his voice rip through the hot afternoon to "Add it Up" and "Blister in the Sun," while the audience sang along. They played "Old Mother Reagan" once, then asked the crowd if it was okay to play it again. Why not? A fantastic day for the Femmes and Femmes fans alike.

Queen Latifah had arrived by the end of the Femmes, and played an abbreviated set, asking the men in the crowd to raise their left hands and say "Kings" and for the women to raise their right hands and say "Queens." She decided she needed dancers, and picked six people from the front of the audience to join her on stage.

"Now . . . I hope you all can dance," she said. Mark Bobb-Semple, a student at State University of New York, Plattsburg, was visiting his friends this weekend and became one of the lucky ones.

"I was commenting just before I got pulled on stage that she needed dancers. It was great, something I really wanted to do.

"As an outsider, it looked like everyone was really having a great time."

Ziggy Marley's performance was a bit detached, but fun. He opened with "Tumblin' Down," a gutsy song. Many people in the audience had waited all day for Marley and said they were not disappointed.

Germaine St. Mary, a junior Political Science major, said she came mainly for "Ziggy" but also to hear the Violent Femmes.

"I was psyched for the entire concert but especially for the Violent Femmes and Ziggy," she said. "Ziggy was great."

George Packard, sitting on the 'left bank' (the lawn between the Tower Library and the pond) came to the concert late and only for "Ziggy." He came to the concert with his best dog, Tosh, named after Peter Tosh, the reggae musician assassinated a few years ago.

"We can't hear too well on this side of the pond," Packard said. "If we didn't bring Tosh we could have gotten closer to Ziggy."

Ellen Low, a UMass graduate, said the rules were much stricter at this year's show. She was camped on the left bank with several friends. She said, "It seems almost militant in there. I would say the people on this side had a lot more fun."

But the day was not about who had more fun, it was a day devoted to music and people's love of music; and who could be unhappy with sun and music on hand?

THIRD WORLD AFFAIRS

Technological terrorism: Bhopal five years later

No one is counting the numbers any longer. People are dying like flies. They are brought in, their chest heaving violently, their limbs trembling. Acute swelling of the lungs has already set in. Nothing seems to work on Union Carbide's victims. Treatment is useless. I count 17 bodies numbered and photographed emerging from the morgue in the course of 25 minutes. If there ever was a wretchedly undignified hideously helpless form of mega-death after Hiroshima and Nagasaki this is it. Suddenly, you don't want to watch it anymore. Praful Bidwai, Times of India, 16 Dec. 1984.

We have erased it from our minds. Bhopal.

Bhopal. A quiet industrial town in the Central Indian state of Madhya Pradesh. A place to live, raise families, laugh and cry.

Especially a place to cry.

On the night of December 2, 1984, Bhopal became a gas chamber for multitudes of Indian people, and a monument to the rapacious greed of US multinationals, as well as their capacity to buy the integrity of Third World officials for a pittance.

That night the temperature and pressure in storage tank 610 dramatically spiralled. A deadly gas called methyl-isocyanate (MIC) exploded out of the tank. Clouds of lethal gas floated over Bhopal like a shroud of death. The world's worst industrial disaster had just commenced.

Almost 10,000 Indian people died that night. 86,000 are permanently disabled. 500,000 suffer from chronic sickness as a consequence of gas poisoning. Five years later, victims continue to die at the rate of one a day. Spontaneous abortion, deformed babies and paralysis devastate those that live.

The gruesome story of Bhopal started in 1969, when Union Carbide Corporation, based in Danbury, Connecticut, decided to build a chemical plant with the stated objective of manufacturing a pesticide called Sevin. The plant would be operated by the multinational giant's Indian subsidiary.

The pesticide Sevin is processed from a lethally toxic organic compound called methyl isocyanate (MIC). The perilous MIC based processing technique was in a semi-experimental phase, and the dynamics of this technique are not fully understood to date.

The plant was located near a vast network of slums populated by impoverished cart drivers, milkmen and street vendors.

These were incidental concerns for Union Carbide, as for all U.S. multinationals. Neo-colonial sellouts in the Indian government granted the plant a license. No questions were asked. Money talks. Union Carbide wined and dined local politicians and press, and crushed any attempt by workers' unions to warn the world of the lax safety procedures and obsolete instrumentation in the plant.

On October 5, 1982, deadly MIC gas leaked from a pipeline. Gas clouds floated over the plant, workers ran for shelter, sirens screamed, and people in the neighboring slums woke up, complaining of eye irritation. Luckily, the leak was plugged in time.

A U.S. team visited Bhopal that year, and submitted a classified report to the multinational that pointed out the inadequate and obsolete nature of the plant's instrumentation and safety devices. Carbide was fully aware of the shape of things to come.

It was against this backdrop that the horrendous events of December 1984 were played out. That night thousands of panic-stricken men, women and children ran down the streets, some vomitting blood, others collapsing. The smell of rotten almonds pervaded the air, emanating from the sinister smokestacks of the Union Carbide plant. No siren was sounded.

PRATIP DASTIDAR

The three supposed safety backups that Union Carbide had installed were a scrubber that sprays caustic soda on the gas, a water curtain that absorbs gas in a sheet of water, and a flare tower that is supposed to burn the gas. All were out of operation on the night of the disaster. Profit was more vital than safety.

Even as news of the tragedy unfolded, the corporate bosses in Danbury scrambled to cover up. They used copybook mutinational tactics: First, deny the problem; second, put it in "perspective"; third, blame a hysterical public; fourth, blame the victim; fifth, try to divide the victims; sixth, settle with the government for a pittance, after doling out bribes.

As Carbide stocks plunged on Wall Street, the corporation shifted the blame onto its Indian employees, attempting to absolve itself. After all, Indians operated the plant.

No mention of the fact that the parent corporation owned 50 percent of the shares, and controlled all the technology. A fractious Indian management could be effortlessly manipulated.

No mention of the fact that the entire design of the plant was carried out in the U.S. Technical experts were appalled at the crude instrumentation and disregard for basic safety principles inherent in the plant design.

For instance, the scrubber could only handle gas leaks at pressures that were barely two-fifths of that in tank 610. The flare tower could only burn a few hundred liters of toxic gas each hour, as compared to the 40 tons released from the storage tank. The vent from which the toxic gas leaked was 33 meters above ground, 18 meters higher than the designed water curtain height.

Needless to say, Union Carbide continues to display blatant disregard for Indian lives. Crucial medical information about the long-term effects of MIC gas has been withheld by Union Carbide from medical authorities that are treating the gas victims. Under the guise of "industrial security," the multinational is prolonging the agony of those that it gassed.

The Indian government responded to the Bhopal disaster by filing suit against top officials of Union Carbide, USA and its Indian affiliate for criminal genocide. Compensation of $3 billion was demanded.

Union Carbide's lawyers successfully prevented the Bhopal survivors from prosecuting the company in a U.S. court. Multinationals dread being tried in Europe or America. Courts in these countries are compelled to abide by compensation precedents in their legal systems. A sum of $3 billion would hardly cover the claims that would arise if 500,000 New Yorkers were gassed.

In February 1989 the government of Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi shocked all sectors of Indian society by covertly striking an out-of-court settlement for a meager $470 million. By then, the Bhopal victims had suffered four years without recompense or adequate health care.

The deal was struck to make India "safe for foreign investment." The Third World struggle against multinational malpractice had been utterly betrayed by the anti-people policies of a neo-colonial ruler.

In November 1989, the new government of Prime Minister V.P. Singh salvaged some lost integrity by renouncing the settlement, on the grounds that it vastly undercompensated the Bhopal survivors. The case was reopened, and the criminal charges against the genocidal bosses in Danbury were re-introduced.

Today, the money for medical relief is running out. The Indian government is attempting to pay a monthly stipend of $11.65 to each of the gas victims.

To quote the gas relief commissioner for Bhopal, S.R. Sathyam: "There is now no money to pay salaries for the hospital staff, deliver free milk to the children, train gas victims in trades and extend loans to them."

Current evidence indicates that Union Carbide's Research Center in Bhopal was covertly field testing chemical agents that could be used in anti-crop and biological warfare. Union Carbide has enjoyed a close relationship with the Pentagon. In the aftermath of the tragedy, India's Central Bureau of Investigation closed down the research center and has investigated the national security ramifications.

One is compelled to wonder why a U.S. multinational would pump money into a research center for a pesticide plant that was suffering huge losses since 1980. Who were the Indian government officials that allowed a U.S. multinational to conduct field studies on chemical agents without notifying the Defense Ministry?

Bhopal is a bitter indictment of the U.S. and European environmental movements. People in these countries seem eminently satisfied with cleaning their own backyard and dumping garbage in the Third World. It is a convenient and agreeable solution.

Danbury is less than two hours down the road from the Campus Center. When Carbide prevented the Bhopal victims from a trial in the U.S., champagne corks popped all over the town.

What can be done? Boycott Union Carbide's products such as Eveready batteries and Glad trash bags. Petition your Congress.

One day it will change. One day Union Carbide will be unable to poison people of color, and walk away laughing. The memory of Bhopal will live on.

Let those who benefit from industry absorb its fall-out.

El Destino, Nicaragua, April 26 — Armed Contra rebels rest at a camp. These Contras refuse to disarm as long as Sandinista Humberto Ortega remains in the new government.

End Distortion

Once again, the idiotic, confused and totally ignorant constituents of the elite rear their ugly heads to try to educate us about OUR LIVES, OUR PEOPLE, OUR PROBLEMS, OUR COUNTRY.

Typically, the views expressed are totally devoid of any understanding of or insight into any of the many complex issues relating to not only South Africa but the rest of Africa as well.

ANIL KANJEE

The South African/Azanian Students Movement (Pioneer Valley Branch) has ignored many of these letters that have continuously surfaced in the many newspapers in the valley and surrounding areas. Responding to such abysmal ignorance was regarded by us as a waste of valuable time and effort. But not when this ignorance transforms itself into grandiose beliefs of academic excellence.

Typically, the authors project their own fears and unhappy days at 'school', try to use absurd examples and inaccurate information, and view events in completely inappropriate contexts to make a point about a subject they know nothing of.

These people talk about the African National Congress' armed struggle without mentioning that the South African people have been brutalized, dehumanized and massacred since the first White settlers were welcomed on the shores of our beloved country, or the fact that the armed struggle was only resorted to after 50 years of peaceful talks and negotiations.

The problems of sub-Saharan Africa are mentioned without noting the wholesale rape and exploitation of our land and our people. No mention is made about the enormous, unfair interest rates that all so-called Third World countries have to pay.

Are these people aware of the role that their own governments have in supporting 'freedom movements' which massacre and mutilate thousands of innocent Black people and destabilize legitimate African governments, all in the name of the "preservation of Western-style democracy?"

Let us now stoop to their level of debate and use a "disease analogy." To cure the cancer you must indeed attack the source.

Let us now consider how these tumors are manifested. In the South African situation, racial capitalism supported by the West makes up the greatest part of that tumor.

Are these people so scared of now losing their slave labor and not being able to continue to exploit South Africans anymore? How are they going to generate huge profits in the future? Or is it too inconceivable that such a rich, powerful and beautiful country is going to be ruled by a Black government?

Sure, these people know a lot. After all, they have probably visited Africa once, flown over Zimbabwe, seen a movie about South Africa, and even spent over four whole hours at the airport in Johannesburg. They also have "intellectual integrity." It really is a tremendous task "offering advice" from ivory towers.

The oppressed South African masses are well aware of the recent changes in strategy of the White racist governments on all fronts. This includes changes in the diplomatic corps where some of the country's highest ranking politicians and academics are now employed, increasing the number of people on its payroll in Washington and other capital cities to include politicians and so-called freelance reporters, and increasing its agents in the economic and sports arenas to bust sanctions, etc.

It is thus not surprising for us to see articles that totally distort the reality in our country and try to justify the racist and oppressive policies of the White minority government. This crucial fact should be borne in mind, and we sincerely hope that the community would be able to sift out propaganda from fact.

The freedom of our people from oppression and exploitation is now only a matter of time.

Not all college instructors wear tweed.

The men and women of the Army National Guard would like to give you an education.

Lesson One: Economics. College isn't cheap.

Lesson Two: Finance. But by serving in the Army National Guard you can qualify for the Montgomery GI Bill–and earn up to $18,000 towards college. By serving as little as one weekend a month and two weeks a year, you can just about cover your tuition.

Lesson Three: Psychology. The Guard will also teach you things about yourself you never knew. You'll gain self-confidence. You'll find out what you're made of. And just how much more you're capable of doing.

Lesson Four: Philosophy. Whether you're operating a tank or assisting in an operating room, you'll be part of making America a stronger nation.

For additional information on how to continue your education, return this coupon or please call 1-800-638-7600 or contact your local Army National Guard recruiting office.

TODAY FOR "SHOW AND TELL," I HAVE A SOUVENIR FROM THE AFTERLIFE! YES, YOU HEARD RIGHT! EQUALLY AMAZING IS MY OWN STORY OF YESTERDAY AFTERNOON, WHEN I ACTUALLY DIED OF BOREDOM!
I WAS DOING MY HOMEWORK, WHEN SUDDENLY I COLLAPSED! I FELT MYSELF RISING, AND I COULD SEE MY CRUMPLED BODY ON THE FLOOR. I DRIFTED UP IN A SHAFT OF LIGHT AND I ENTERED THE NEXT WORLD!
EVENTUALLY, MY HEART STARTED AGAIN AND I CAME BACK TO LIFE... BUT NOT BEFORE BRINGING THIS BACK!

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You may face several interesting complications today. Now is an opportune time to deal with VIPs. The good deeds you do will boost your status at work. Attention to detail begins to pay off.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Learn from your mistakes but refuse to dwell on them. Emotional upsets are easier to handle now. New work challenges excite you. Cut down on those small luxuries that can wreck your budget.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be careful when taking risks in business; confirm details and seek advice if you are in doubt. Agreements reached today may boost profits. Communications can fool you; double-check everything.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Keep travel and physical tasks to a minimum today. This is not the time to make momentous decisions. It really does pay to be moderate. Romance could be rocky. Curb your temper.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Others will pledge their loyalty and help to you today; a phone call or meeting is all it will take. Keep up the pace at work – influential people are watching you. Long-term arrangements are favored.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): People who wield power or have great wealth may be especially helpful now. Your recent career efforts begin to pay off. Settle bills promptly to protect your credit rating.

LIBRA (Sept 23-Oct. 22): Long-distance affairs could be highly rewarding today. Be sure to plan ahead. Afternoon hours may put you in touch with a long-lost love. Romance looks sweeter the second time around.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Various complications could arise today; be doubly careful what you do and say. You shine in affairs of the heart. Performing a good deed will do wonders for your status in the community.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A dear friend's trauma can strengthen your friendship. Be a good listener. Resolve to change your spending habits. Shun someone who seems to have ulterior motives.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Member of opposite sex's unconventional behavior may embarrass you. Speak your mind after a cooling-off period. A stranger could play a meaningful role in a business decision you make today.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Someone you meet in a public place could give you a job lead; follow up immediately. A makeover will lift your spirits and improve your image. Try to get some exercise everyday.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Read the fine print or you could end up owing money. Do not be taken in by a newcomer's flattery; he could have designs on your job or contracts. A letter from home brings welcome news.

When you're the best in LSAT prep you get a lot of free advertising.

Why do many LSAT prep "experts" keep comparing themselves to Kaplan in their ads? Because they don't want you to start comparing with real facts and figures.

If you did, you'd discover that more Ivy League law students prepared at Kaplan than anywhere else. You'd discover the world's largest test prep research staff, the most up-to-date materials, the most comprehensive computerized diagnostic program.

You'd discover that you never have to miss a class—either review lessons with an instructor or with our LSAT prep tapes. And that we'll never close you out of a course because we can add classes to fill students' needs.

You'd discover that our LSAT prep is, and always has been, guaranteed. And lastly, that Kaplan students are well-represented among those who score the most.

So call. Enroll. You'll discover just why Kaplan is students' first choice for LSAT prep—and other companies' first choice for imitation.

Australia. And after that?

"We're looking to put together an instructional tape," Gary said. "We want to put something back into the game."

He said that the tape wouldn't include some of their more outrageous maneuvers, such as the "Air Gait" slam-dunk shot that he has pulled off a couple of times.

In one of the day's lighter moments, Paul walked up to shake Garber's hand after the game. Garber asked Paul what he and his brother were doing after this season and he said, "Oh, we'll be back next year."

Garber dropped his clipboard in shock before Paul assured him that they'd be graduating in January. This is their last year of eligibility. Promise.

Closer to home, UMass will now sit and await its fate, which is squarely in the hands of the NCAA selection committee. (Have to point out that the tournament field is decided by coaches and conference officials, and not stogie-chompin' men as was mentioned last week. Must have been watching the Sportswriters on TV at the time.)

Anyway, guesses have UMass anywhere between ninth and 11th after yesterday's loss. Eleven teams from the East make the field, with the token 12th team coming from the weaker West region.

First-round games for seeds 5-12 begin next Wednesday, with the quarterfinals following on Sunday, May 20. Those games will be played at the site of the higher seeded team.

The Final Four will be held Saturday, May 26 (semifinals) and Monday, May 28 (championship game) at Rutgers Stadium in Piscataway, N.J.

Syracuse assault too much for Gorillas

Top-ranked Orangemen roll over UM, 23-9

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — The Syracuse University men's lacrosse team isn't ready to admit to claims that it may be the best team of all-time.

But there may not be any disputing the fact that the Orangemen are No. 1 for 1990, just as they have been the past two seasons. Top-ranked Syracuse lived up to its billing in a big way yesterday, knocking off the University of Massachusetts, 23-9 before a crowd of 8,777 at the CarrierDome.

It was Senior Day at the Dome, the last home game for 13 members of the Orangemen (although they will no doubt get a home game in the NCAA quarterfinals when the pairings are announced next Sunday).

While many of those who stuck around after yesterday's 'Cuse graduation were in attendance to marvel at the "Golden Gaits" one last time, it was a well-balanced Syracuse attack that did in the Gorillas.

"We're a very unselfish team," said SU coach Roy Simmons, Jr. "In spots, we've done some things that other teams have never done. But a lot of kids can have a good day."

Yesterday, the entire Syracuse team had a good day, much to the chagrin of visiting UMass, which could only hope for a letdown of sorts from the Orangemen.

But it wasn't meant to be. Syracuse distanced itself throughout the first half and then turned it on during the final 30 minutes to win going away.

"[Syracuse is] an awesome lacrosse team. They had a great day," said UMass coach Dick Garber.

When speaking of the dominant tendencies of the Orange, often overshadowed by an explosive offense is the fact that it also has one of the best defenses in the country. In a way, the defense was what allowed SU to roll to victory in this one.

The Gorillas were very much within shouting distance, down just 12-6 at the half. But then Simmons went with one of his seniors — goalie Matt Palumb, who didn't start after missing two games with a knee injury. Palumb point-blank stoned several excellent UMass scoring chances, shutting out the Gorillas in the third quarter.

"He made some big saves," Garber said. "Our problem is that we'd get a great shot, he'd make a great save and before we know it, they'd be down the other end scoring a goal."

Syracuse never unleashed a dizzying barrage, one of those "score 10 goals before you can blink" outbursts that makes an opponent positively ill. Instead, the Orange merely pecked away constantly at the UMass defense and goalie Ted Kellerman (20 saves).

Kellerman made 16 of those saves in the first half, playing solidly to keep the Gorillas in the game. SU jumped out to a 4-0 lead four minutes into the game after scoring twice in the first minute.

Despite the quick Syracuse start, Garber wasn't about to abandon his game plan to slow the Orangemen down.

"I told the kids that the game isn't over," Garber said. "We were behind 7-1 last year [UM rallied but fell short, 10-9]."

Again, the Gorillas got back into it. Senior midfielder Tim Soudan and freshman attack Mark Millon (two goals) each tallied, and junior midfielder Ed O'Callaghan later worked a nice give-n-go with senior attck Scott Hiller to draw UMass to within 5-3.

Syracuse was able to shut down Jim McAleavey during yesterday's 23-9 win at the CarrierDome.

It was 6-3 after one quarter and UMass was as close as 9-5 on the first of three goals by senior attack Rob Codignotto with 8:31 left in the half.

However, the Orange picked up the pace and the rest was history.

As was the case in Wednesday's big win over Brown, the third quarter was the turning point. But this time it was UMass on the short end, unable to crack the SU defense.

Beyond the work of Palumb, credit belongs with the SU defenders who smothered Hiller and junior attack Jim McAleavey. Hiller had a single assist while McAleavey was held without a point by All-America defender Pat McCabe.

"That's when Goliath meets Goliath — someone has to come out a winner," Garber said. "McCabe's an awesome defenseman, but I can't tell [McAleavey] not to try."

Try he did, but not much seemed to work.

Meanwhile, show time was just beginning at the other end. The Gait brothers astonished the crowd late in the third quarter when Paul found his twin brother Gary cutting toward the net.

The pass was a bit high, forcing two-time national Player-of-the-Year Gary to jump for it. As he landed, he swept a shot between his legs that found the net before Kellerman even knew what had happened.

That was the killer, putting SU up 18-7 to end the third. Codignotto and attackmen Rob Falvey and Bill Begien each scored in the fourth quarter, but it was much too little and far too late.

UMass came out fired up and ready to challenge the mighty Orangemen, but mistakes against a team of this caliber easily come back to haunt, and they did.

"Our effort was super, but our execution was very mediocre," Garber said. "We threw the ball away and took weak shots. We didn't control the ball and faceoffs hammered us."

Any UMass attempt to control the tempo went awash as SU was winning 28 of the game's 36 faceoffs. The Orange took 76 shots compared to just 40 for UMass and dominated the ground balls, 72-43.

"This doesn't make us less of a team. We were hopeful to give them a tough game," Garber said.

But on this day, it was fairly clear that the Orangemen were the best team in the country.

Gorilla Grumblings: Syracuse wasn't totally merciless on the Gorillas. Before the game, the team honored the retiring Garber at midfield and presented him with a jacket.

Those involved in the presentation were Simmons, along with tri-captains Paul and Gary Gait and Jim Egan. The final member of the SU cast was football coach Dick MacPherson, whose coaching career got off the ground when he was the UMass head coach from 1971-77.

Just as this edition of the Orange is being dubbed one of the best, many experts consider Gary Gait the best player of all-time.

"I can't say that at all," said Gait, who along with his identical twin hails from Brentwood Bay, B.C. "I couldn't have done it without Paul or without the players who have been here and who are here now."

Unlike most sports, there isn't a tremendous financial future in lacrosse after college, even for players as dominant as the Gaits. They plan to compete for Canada in the World Championships this summer in

Young gets revenge on BoSox

By the Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. — Rickey Henderson's instant offense made Curt Young a better pitcher yesterday.

Henderson led off with a home run for the second straight game, extending his own major-league record to 43, and Curt Young held Boston to two hits in eight innings as the Oakland Athletics beat the Red Sox, 4-2.

"When Curt Young is in a groove," said Oakland manager Tony LaRussa, "he's a quality pitcher. He's as good as anybody on our staff if you give him a lead. He's a real competitor."

Young (1-1) walked five batters in the first 3 1-3 innings, did not walk anyone else. He struck out five, retired 14 in a row from the fourth through eighth innings and didn't allow a hit after Wade Boggs' double in the third.

Last week in Boston, Young was shelled by the Red Sox for 10 earned runs in six innings.

"I came into the game with something to prove," said Young. "Not to Boston, but to myself. I can't let a bad game dwell on my mind."

Boston manager Joe Morgan wasn't sure if he was seeing the same Curt Young this time.

"What a difference a week makes with Mr. Young, eh?" said Morgan.

Dennis Eckersley struck out two in the ninth for his ninth save in nine tries.

Henderson connected against Eric Hetzel (1-2) for his fourth homer of the week and fifth of the season.

Henderson, leading the American League with a .381 average, also singled and stole his 13th base of the year. He left the game with a bruised left knee in the fourth inning and his status is day-to-day, although he is not expected to miss any games.

"I just try to go up on the first at-bat and make good, hard contact," Henderson said. "Bobby Bonds taught me that. Just go up there and put a little fear into the pitcher on your first at-bat."

Bonds was the long-time record-holder of leadoff homers until Henderson came along.

One out after Henderson's home run, Jose Canseco walked, advanced on a wild pitch and scored on Ken Phelps' two-out single.

Boston got an unearned run in the third. Tom Brunansky, playing his first game since being traded from St. Louis for Lee Smith, walked and scored when Young threw wildly on Tony Pena's infield hit.

Carney Lansford's two-run single in the second gave Oakland a 4-1 lead, scoring Terry Steinbach and Mike Gallego. Hetzel lasted only 1 2-3 innings, but reliever Dennis Lamp came on to hold the A's to two hits over the next 4 1-3 innings.

UMass asks Ford for grant money

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

Administrators and student leaders endorsed a proposal sent to the Ford Foundation last week requesting a $100,000 grant to establish a University Social Justice Institute.

In a statement sent to the director of the Foundation, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson said the Institute would help the University sustain diversity and improve campus race relations.

"We propose to establish an Institute for Social Justice, beginning with a summer training program designed for faculty and other professional educators," he said.

In the wake of "well-publicized incidents of racial violence," Madson said the Institute would help develop "a broad range of programs designed to address the issues of diversity and race relations."

The University proposal entails having some 20-30 arts and sciences faculty, who teach more than half of undergraduate classes, attend the summer program.

The trained faculty would then "facilitate adjustment of a traditionally trained and somewhat homogeneous faculty to an undergraduate population that is increasingly assertive and diverse in race, ethnicity, lifestyle and political persuasion."

"The traditional 'band-aid approach' to incidents of racism and sexism obscures the depth and scope of the issues that most colleges and universities face," the University argued.

Saying that many institutions are falling short on addressing "isms," the University said it is prepared to engage in a "small scale" attack on these issues.

Student Government Association leaders sent a hearty endorsement of the University proposal to the Foundation saying the new Institute would provide "an excellent environment for the development of this program."

"This program is long overdue, but due to troubled fiscal times in Massachusetts, a grant is the only way to develop a Social Justice Institute on this campus," the SGA letter said. "This goes beyond an investment, it's an investment in the future, that has the potential to change the focus of higher education."

Several administrators, including President/Chancellor Duffey and Provost O'Brien, also sent letters supporting the proposal.

"Our campus has been the scene of frightening, racially-motivated violence; it has also experienced inspiring celebrations of cultural diversity," the administrative statement said. "The opportunity to learn personally, theoretically, and socially from these positive and negative situations has

New budget presented by House Ways, Means

BOSTON (AP) — A $13.3 billion budget for fiscal 1991 was unveiled yesterday by the House Ways and Means Committee, which also recommended a massive reorganization of the way the state provides health care to the needy.

House Speaker George Keverian said the plan is a bare-bones spending bill, but it is based on new taxes to make up for short state revenues and has items which Gov. Michael Dukakis did not include.

"The speaker instructed us to put our efforts into long-term savings, reorganizing that there would be certain short-term costs, including increases in the home care budget," said Rep. Richard Voke, committee chairman.

The budget is not expected to come up for debate until next week. This week, the House leadership has scheduled action on a tax hike bill needed to help pay for it and to pay for some red ink for fiscal 1990.

Democratic House leaders have not disclosed details of the tax increase proposal, but it is expected to raise income tax rates and the gasoline tax.

The tax increase is needed not only for the next year's spending, House leaders have said, but also to start erasing a $1 billion deficit for the current fiscal year that ends June 30.

Rep. John McDonough, D-Boston, who headed a Ways and Means subcommittee studying health care costs, said consolidating health-related agencies is a key to the plan.

The overall agency under a commissioner of health would include the Medicaid section of the Department of Public Welfare, the Home Care agency under the secretary of elder affairs, the Department of Medical Security, the Rate Setting Commission, the boards of registration in health-related occupations, the Group Insurance Commission and the Health Planning Office.

The new department, to be in place Jan. 1, would control $3.2 billion in spending, or one quarter of the state budget.

One of the key changes centers on Medicaid, the federal-state program which pays certain medical expenses of people with no income expenses of people with no income or little income. It involves about 475,000 people in Massachusetts.

The Ways and Means bill calls for moving to managed care, like a health maintenance organization, for all Medicaid recipients by 1992, limiting hikes rates to under 3 percent yearly, paying for health services without regard to where they are done, tighter audit controls on health spending and controls on health spending and use of community and home care to cut the cost of care for the elderly.

But it restores significant cuts proposed in Dukakis' budget in January, such as elimination of nursing home care for elderly people who don't need 24-hour nursing care.

Also added back was a $110 million state supplemental payment for needy elderly, blind and disabled people receiving Supplemental Security Income, a federal-state welfare program. The state supplement is worth about a quarter of the income of those elderly and disabled poor people.

Other features of budget:

- Level-funded local aid, which means restoration of some $75 million Dukakis had proposed to cut from this year's level.
- Restoration of the Criminal Justice Training Council which trains local police officers.
- Consolidating of three cabinet secretaries, the executive offices of economic affairs, consumer affairs and communities and development into a single Executive Office of Commerce and Development, effective Jan. 1, 1991.
- Elimination of the Legislative Research Bureau, which has become a symbol because of the number of former lawmakers employed by it.
- The reduction of an additional 1,100 state jobs.

UM professors talk about plastic

Profs. say most plastic isn't biodegradeable

By DAVID FORRESTER
Collegian Staff

Earth Day and the concern it generated for environmental problems may be just an event fading in society's memory, but for University of Massachusetts professors R. Clinton Fuller and Robert Lenz, the environmental mess is like a thin plastic film that envelopes their day.

Fuller, a biochemist, and Lenz, a polymer scientist, work with plastic. However, their plastic is no ordinary plastic — it's biodegradable.

Most plastics that are called "biodegradable" really are not, the two scientists said in a recent interview.

The plastic bags that manufacturers call biodegradable are synthetic plastics with cornstarch, a natural additive that breaks down, Lenz said.

Lenz said the cornstarch is usually only six to eight percent of the total bag.

"Even if all of the six or eight percent degraded all it would do is leave some depressions on the surface," Lenz said. "It wouldn't even leave a hole in the bag."

The synthetic, petroleum-based plastic would remain indefinitely, Fuller added.

Fuller and Lenz are working with truly biodegradable plastics, they said. This is because the polyesters they have been working with for the past three years, polyhydroxyalkanoates, are created by bacteria, Fuller said.

A polyester is a chain of chemicals which can be used in making fibers, as in clothing, or in producing plastics.

The natural polyesters are produced by bacteria when their nutrients run low and are stored inside the organism as granules, Fuller said. This is like fat storage in other animals — the bacteria can draw upon this reserve fuel if other energy sources are depleted, he said.

The natural plastic can be melted and molded just like synthetic plastics that are used in the disposable items that fill landfills, they said.

"The bacterially-made plastic has all the chemical and physical properties of the synthetic, petroleum-based plastics, and more," Fuller said.

Natural plastics degrade because enzymes that break down matter recognize the bacterially-produced plastic and can turn it into carbon dioxide and water.

The synthetic plastics are not broken down by the enzymes because, even though they may look the same to us, they do not look the same to enzymes and the enzymes cannot break them down, they said.

"Whatever nature makes, nature can degrade," Lenz said.

One problem inhibiting the widespread use of these natural plastics is cost, Fuller said.

Petroleum, the major component of synthetic plastics, is inexpensive right now. The biodegradable plastics are $15 per pound while the synthetics are $.50 per pound.

Fuller and Lenz said they predict when oil prices rise, natural plastics will become more popular.

Another problem with biodegradable plastics is the current landfill disposal system, they said.

According to the scientists, nothing, whether biodegradable or not, will degrade in a landfill.

Fuller said 50-year-old newspapers and watermelon rinds have been found undegraded in landfills. There is no bacterial digestion in a landfill because the bacteria that contain enzymes to break down the waste need air and moisture to survive, Lenz said.

Fuller said, "A landfill is a tomb — it's dry and there is no air. They dig up 3,000-year-old Egyptian mummies from such tombs and they look fine."

A composting facility or a sewage treatment plant is better for breaking down organic matter, Lenz said.

Lenz began: "It is one of those temporary quirks of the 20th century. We're taking our trash and burying it . . ."

Fuller finished his colleague's sentence: "and not knowing what the hell to do with it."

Racist graffiti found at McNamara Dormitory

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

Derogatory statements and racial epithets were found written on the walls outside of rooms in the McNamara Residence Hall Saturday.

The matter is under investigation by the Civil Disorders Unit of the Department of Public Safety.

LARCENY

- A man reported Friday that his vehicle in Lot 33 was entered by cutting into the convertible top. The center console was broken into where $100 in cash and credit cards were stolen. The stereo system and speakers were also stolen. The estimated value is $1,095.
- A man reported Friday that his vehicle was broken into by Stadium E Lot. The window was broken and a slide-in radio bracket was stolen. The value is $100.
- A woman reported Sunday that her vehicle was broken into in Lot 22. A large number of cassette tapes were stolen. The estimated value is $150.
- A man reported Sunday that his vehicle parked in Lot 47 was broken into and a radar detector, shirts, 10 tapes and a baseball were taken. The estimated value is $600.
- A man reported Sunday that someone entered his room while he was asleep and removed a compact disc player and a disc. The estimated value is $114.
- Police on patrol in Lot 33 discovered a vehicle broken into. The stereo system and amplifier were taken. The estimated value is $600.

ARRESTS

- Bert C. Merrill, 20, of Woburn, was arrested on Friday at the Southwest Horseshoe for operating after suspension, being a minor transporting alcohol and on an outstanding warrant from the Medford Police Department.
- Nathan E. Malloy, 19, of Winchester, was arrested Saturday on Commonwealth Avenue for being a minor transporting alcohol.
- Scott J. McLaughlin, 22, of Raynham, was arrested Saturday on Massachusetts Avenue for operating under the influence of alcohol and several motor vehicle violations.
- Christopher P. Bolduc, 19, of New Haven, VT, Todd F. Hadley, 20, of Malvern, PA and Robert G. Rigger, address not given, were arrested Saturday in Lot 49 by the water tower for beings minors carrying alcohol.
- Kamran S. Hakimdin, 19, of Milton, was arrested Saturday for being a minor carrying alcohol.
- Joseph M. Grealish, 19, of Mattapan, was arrested Sunday on Sunset Avenue for being a minor carrying alcohol and using another person's license.

VANDALISM

- Twelve windows were reported Saturday broken in the stairwell of Baker Residence Hall. The estimated damage is $400.
- Windows were smashed Saturday on a state van parked by the Apiary building.
- A man reported Sunday that someone smashed the windshield on his vehicle parked in the Southwest Horseshoe. The estimated damage is $200.

DISTURBANCES

- A candle left on top of a radio caused a fire in a room on the second floor of Moore. The estimated damage is $400.

UMass responds to recent campus rape

By DIANE HICKS
Collegian Staff

On the night of April 28, 1990, more than 800 women protested violence against women in a "Take Back The Night" rally held at the University of Massachusetts Student Union steps. In the early morning hours which followed, a nineteen-year-old UMass student was reportedly raped in one of the University's remote parking lots.

A week later, students hold mixed reactions to the possibility and incidence of rape on their campus. Jessamyn Bilodeau, a UMass student living on campus said that this rape is a reminder of the vulnerability of women.

"You [as a woman on this campus] feel like nightmares are happening all around you and there's nothing you can do about it," Bilodeau said.

Consequently, many other UMass woman expressed a feeling of security not shaken by the rape reported only a week earlier. Ann Klocek, a UMass freshman said, "I feel pretty safe myself."

Additionally Jennifer O'Brien, a sophomore at the University said, "it didn't really affect me" adding, "I think [rape is] going to happen everywhere. I think it would happen more in Boston at a school like Northeastern than here."

Another UMass student, Andrea Kupec said, "People need to know [about the high incidence of rape on this campus], if they don't, they'll feel safe when they really aren't."

Kupec said she was raped in her dorm room as a freshman, and that it took her three years to admit it to anyone.

She said she didn't report the rape because she was afraid, adding "I felt like I had done something wrong."

Kupec, who now works security at Orchard Hill Residential Area where a new door-lock system is being employed, said she is happy about the system even though it can be an inconvenience.

She said, "there have been several rapes this semester," adding "the only way we're going to stop [rape] is for everybody to [work] together."

Regarding last week's rape Kupec said, "I support that woman and I hope she gets help to deal with [the trauma of the rape]."

Kupec said that education about rape is crucial to the fight against it, and added that she was glad to see last week's rape victim come forward and report the crime. "There's not enough about this mentioned," she said.

Deb Levy, counselor advocate with the Everywoman's Center agreed that education is crucial but said "I don't think it's the responsibility of the victim to use their own traumatic experience for the education of others."

"As for the women who feel the confidence and strength to go public [with their story of rape] I support that" she said.

been essential to our development as a truly multicultural university."

The content of the four-week program would include information on oppressive theories, "isms" theory, facts, history, multicultural organizational development, oppression/liberation development theory, groups and leadership, and training paradigms, the proposal said.

"The Institute would provide a place to come and think, challenge one another, envision the future, advance theories, learn new skills, update existing skills, be certified, take time out from practice, and be rejuvenated for creating a socially just world," the statement said.

Madson said the Foundation will notify the University of its acceptance or rejection for the grant.

When you're the best in LSAT prep you get a lot of free advertising.
Why do many LSAT prep "experts" keep comparing themselves to Kaplan in their ads? Because they don't want you to start comparing with real facts and figures.
If you did, you'd discover that more Ivy League law students prepared at Kaplan than anywhere else. You'd discover the world's largest test prep research staff, the most up-to-date materials, the most comprehensive computerized diagnostic program.
You'd discover that you never have to miss a class—either review lessons with an instructor or with our LSAT prep tapes. And that we'll never close you out of a course because we can add classes to fill students' needs.
You'd discover that our LSAT prep is, and always has been, guaranteed. And lastly, that Kaplan students are well-represented among those who score the most.

T.V. perpetuates skinhead stereotype

On April 30, a Monday night, Fox television network aired an episode of 21 Jump Street that scared the pants off of me.

This is because I am a non-racist skinhead, and Fox aired a show that represented all skinheads as Neo-Nazi, White supremacist, high school dropouts, motivated by beer and hate.

Cady Spencer

The skinhead movement sprung from the late sixties in England when a great wave of unemployment swept the country and many young men (and women) were out of work and out of luck. This working class is where we got some of our "standards" of dress, work boots and clothing.

Many of these unemployed young men shaved their heads, to unify and identify (as opposed to the "longhairs" youth). Much of their music of the time was ska and reggae, sprouted from the Jamaican immigrant movement which occurred at about the same time.

In the late seventies, with the blossoming of the punk movement, many youths re-identified with the clean-shaven, angry, yet still unemployed skinheads.

Unfortunately, some skins believed that Jamaicans and other immigrants were responsible for taking their jobs. These few racists of the time have unfortunately stemmed their prejudiced hate to today's American skinheads.

After punk came to America, news of the skinhead movement also followed, a movement that many middle and lower class youths could identify with. Some, which were/are ignorant, or perhaps raised in a racist environment, clung to the angry, racist "shaved for battle" front, which bring us to today's racist skinheads.

Non-racist skinheads realize the equality of the races, some of these skinheads still listen to the same ska and reggae. Some also listen to "Oi!" style music from England, which basically sounds like angry rock and roll. All skinheads share some basic principles — a strong code of beliefs, of honor, to be clean and hard working. Some still wear the same boots and apparel of our earlier skinhead brothers (and sisters).

To get back to the Fox 21 Jump Street, I was basically offended because, to boost ratings and gain viewers, they showed only the ugly side of the skinhead movement.

They did not represent any non-racist skins, and the skinheads they did represent expressed their feeling with such dialogue as "Let's go stomp." That one skinhead was unemployed and he wouldn't work a shit job like picking vegetables or factory work, which is the exact opposite of true skinhead ideals.

My enthusiasm plummeted as they smashed their heads together and into walls, and also blatantly punched one of the African-American women on the show. Although sexism runs rampant in prime time television, men deliberately striking women is rarely depicted, because it is viewed as true brutality, but that didn't stop the Fox network.

I will not say that there aren't White supremacist hate groups out there; but I believe that, considering less than 20 percent of skinheads in this area are racist and perhaps slightly higher elsewhere, the Fox portrayal was unjust.

I hate to say what people can or can't believe, but it is a question between freedom of beliefs and what this country stands for, our laws and our standards.

Considering this country I love dearly is an amalgamation of peoples, it is only right that prejudice has no place, on television or anywhere.

Rationalizing racism and hypocrisy

White America has derived its questionable views of people from diverse cultural backgrounds through the indoctrination of society. In this society, equality is preached, while covert racism is practiced.

Cornell R. Allen

It is through this conditioning of people that racism has been rationalized, allowing one to successfully live a life wallowing in hypocrisy. This is how individuals can state with an affirming swing of their head that they are not racist, while manifesting behaviors that say otherwise.

Society also incorporates the manipulative powers of the media in perpetuating the negative imagery of African-Americans, justifying White America's perception that "Blacks" are on welfare because they are lazy; meanwhile, criminals and addicts are so because they have no jobs. This portrayal of "Blacks" reinforces the "lynch mob mentality" that is already ingrained in adults and is unfortunately passed down to children who would otherwise be "color blind."

When was the last positive depiction of an African-American published?

The Charles Stuart case is a classic example of what happens when the frail philosophic objectivity that enwraps this society become pierced, releasing the rage of racism. A heinous crime had been committed against a young, White, affluent middle-class couple, that was expecting their first child.

When a "Black" man was implicated in the brutal slaying of Stuart's wife and unborn child, cries for the death penalty echoed across this supposedly liberal state.

A nation that prides itself on its judicial process literally convicted a man of murder based on racist perceptions of "Blacks."

Recall the 1988 incident at UMass/Amherst. Two "Black" students were assaulted by a group of White youths after leaving a party in McNamara dormitory. Alcohol played a major role in lowering the White group's inhibition, so they could physically display their stumping disapproval of interracial couples.

However, this was an example of how the media can and has contorted the facts. The media manipulated its audience, presented the world that they wanted the public to see.

The shocking horror of a murdered White person by a "Black" is not the only time the lynch mob mentality surfaces. In 1987, a racially motivated brawl rocked through Southwest. "Blacks" were singled out and assaulted, just because they were "Black."

People handle racism by denying its existence; they trivialize its detrimental effects, because the conditioning of society teaches them to rationalize racism and live a life of hypocrisy.

It's time for this level of insanity to end, time to fill in the economic gap. It's time to teach the world that there's a better way. It's time to realize this problem is everyone's problem.

Cornell R. Allen is a UMass student

American labor forgets origins

May 1 was May Day, which is celebrated around the world as the international workers' holiday.

However, even though it began in the United States, this is the only industrial nation which does not recognize it.

Tom Coish

The vast majority of Americans know nothing about it, or labor history in general, or even the contemporary role of organized labor in our society.

The year 1886 was a momentous one in American labor history.

This was the era of the "robber barons" — the tremendous growth in the size, wealth and power of the industrialists and the corporations in the U.S. unions had no legal rights to bargain collectively with their employers; the law and the courts were generally used against workers and their unions by corporations and their allies in government.

Unions had few options other than strikes, long and bitter, to pressure employers to negotiate their labor agreements.

On May 4, 1886, union leaders in Chicago held a mass rally in Haymarket Square to advocate for the eight-hour day (something most American workers now take for granted, but was in fact achieved only after decades of struggle).

During the rally someone — to this day no one knows who — set off a bomb in the crowd which killed and wounded many, including eight policemen killed and over 70 wounded.

Police then fired on the crowd, killing or wounding even more. Almost immediately, authorities and the sensationalistic press of the time blamed several labor activists who organized or addressed the rally, and the severe anti-labor sentiment was whipped up throughout the country.

Despite no evidence which linked them to the bombing, eight activists were convicted, on the theory that their political expression of "radical" ideas such as the eight-hour day directly caused the deaths and injuries at the rally.

Despite international outcry, the eight were executed by hanging.

In honor of the Haymarket murders, May 1, May Day, became the international workers holiday everywhere except the United States, where it all began.

The lack of knowledge of the history and significance of May Day, and the labor history in general among most Americans, is largely the product of the ownership or control of our media, publishing industry and educational system by major corporations and anti-labor politicians.

Few Americans know much about unions and their economic and historical role in society, other than stories of strikes and corrupt union officials.

It is important for workers and others supportive of labor in general to inform themselves and others about the untold story of the American Labor Movement.

Tom Coish is an attorney at the Legal Services Center and a member of the steering committee of Local 509, Service Employees' International Union, the professional staff union at UMass

Carter inconsistent during peace mission

The mission of Jimmy Carter to the Middle East is inconsistent. He criticized Israel about human rights, but forgot to do the same about a country he had just left, Syria.

Israel's response to the Intifada has been mild compared to Arab governments dealing with their own Intifadas. Any fair-minded Palestinian will agree wth me. If Carter chooses to ignore this fact, he does so with no conscience.

Carter's political tourism has not only double standards but also dangers. If he is sincere about making peace between Arab states and Israel, he should do so by telling the rest of the Arab tyrants to talk to Israel and not use Palestinians as an issue.

Israel needs peace with Arab states. Any honest effort is welcome. Also, Israel should be ready to stand up to criticism about human rights (we are talking about its weaknesses).

Instead, if Carter singles out Israel by holding it out on high moral standards, it will only cost him support and friends.

Carter is no longer a politician so he can be truthful. The truth being the arrogance of Arab states (except Egypt) towards Israel is the main impediment in solving the Palestinian problem.

Since truth may or may not guarantee Palestinian rights, lies and double standards will insure the destruction of Israel in the long run. Never again!

Marsh on rock and censorship

By JOSEPH MONTAGNA
Collegian Correspondent

The story behind the censorship of rock and roll and the implications for the average rock fan, will be the basis of a lecture entitled "Rock and Roll Confidential," given by rock writer Dave Marsh.

Marsh, a Brandeis University graduate, and former editor of Rolling Stone, has been a distinguished rock critic since 1970.

Marsh is the best-selling author of 10 books on rock music. Among some of his works include Glory Days: Bruce Springsteen in the 1980s, Born to Run: The Bruce Springsteen Story, Before I Get Old: The Story of the Who, and his latest, published in the fall of '89, The Heart of Rock 'n' Roll: The 1001 Greatest Singles Ever Made.

Marsh is also the current editor of the monthly rock and politics newsletter, Rock and Roll Confidential, and writes for Playboy.

A leader in the fight against music censorship, Marsh will discuss how some groups such as the Parent/Teacher Association (PTA) and the American Academy of Pediatrics want nation-wide restrictions on pop music, and what these restrictions will mean to music.

Some of the implications are seen in such examples as the conviction of record stores in Alabama for selling rap records, and in Nevada, where, according to Marsh, rock bands have been put to trial for "causing" a teenager's suicide.

Marsh goes deeper, however, when he attempts to establish a connection between the drive to censor rock and the music's role in the multi-billion dollar music industry; the music industry it seems doesn't want to fight back. Marsh continues the conflict over what popular music is about and says that the rock fan deserves some say.

Dave Marsh will be speaking in the Student Union Ballroom tonight, at 8 p.m. Admission is free. The lecture is sponsored by the Distinguished Visitor's Program. There will be a giveaway of Marsh's book, Rock and Roll Confidential Report, and promotional posters from Glory Days — Bruce Springsteen in the 1980s.

BMCP leader talks of Black women's roles in society

By MELISSA MANOLIS
Collegian Correspondent

Colette Greenstein, a junior communications major at the University of Massachusetts, is one of the many female student leaders on campus. As General Manager of the Black Mass Communications Project, she said Black men and women are being pitted against each other by American society.

The Black Mass Communications Project established as an RSO in 1969 is the second oldest minority organization on campus. When Black enrollment first began to rise on campus, BMCP was established to provide support and serve as a voice for Blacks to the University community.

Since its founding, the organization has broadened and evolved into an educational and informational outlet to the University.

The project broadcasts programming on WMUA, sponsors various speakers, film and cultural events and holds an annual Funk-o-thon to wind down the year.

As well as influencing the present, the BMCP looks to the future by sponsoring the second annual Communications Conference. Featuring Black speakers from a range of media and television backgrounds, students are allowed a window to future careers and a chance to make valuable connections.

As one of the many female leaders at UMass, Greenstein said, "I don't think its a coincidence [that many of the leaders are female]."

For BMCP, she asserts "women are the ones that have been able time and time again to pull through for the organization." She sees this trend in leadership as part of a larger one in society because she said "by the year 2000 women and minorities will make up a majority of the workforce."

For Greenstein, being a Black woman gives her role special significance because she said, "when I walk around on campus I keep in the back of my mind I was not meant to be here. I am lucky."

She feels also that her position is possible in part because "Black women are not perceived as a threat." She feels that Black women need to help their brothers "because the way the government and society are set up Black men are being targeted."

While Black college enrollment is rising, Black male enrollment is plummeting she said. Greenstein said that society, by accepting non-threatening Black women while negatively portraying Black men divides the two. She said, "friction will be caused between Black men and Black women."

Greenstein said that for a Black woman in the women's movement "our needs as minorities are not acknowledged."

For her, race is a more pressing concern than gender. She said that one of the most pressing issues for women today is education because it is integral in seeking equality for women and for minorities.

Personally, Greenstein hopes to work for an alternative station serving Black interests: "I want something in the community that will respond to their needs."

Colette Greenstein

She also said that a sense of history is important: "If you don't know where you have been you can't know where you are now." She feels this is important for minorities because children "are not seeing themselves [represented in this society], they are growing up with no idea to love themselves."

Rooting out racism

I have had many discussions with white women about racism in the women's movement. These women often expressed guilt and helplessness when discussing this issue because they were white and came from economically privileged backgrounds. For a while, I too felt guilt about being White and of the middle class.

Amy Henry

I have learned that feeling guilt and helplessness about this issue is an easy way to rationalize not doing anything about it. White women are not responsible for all of the oppression of women of color throughout history. Feeling guilt and helplessness about this issue is only disempowering. Women of color do not need our guilt and pity. They need a commitment from White women to address their own racism which is not a comfortable thing to do.

We are responsible for educating ourselves about women of color's history and experiences. We will not be able to successfully push forward in the women's movement until this is done. We may never be able to have common goals in the women's movement because we all come from different backgrounds. White women should not expect women of color to have the same issues and concerns for the movement.

When White women understand how they oppress women of color and educate themselves on women of color's issues the women's movement will come one step closer to having a unified movement and a celebration of differences.

A bridge between oppressions

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

Madeleine L. Peters, the coordinator of the Bridge Program, of the Everywoman's Center, said that the purpose of the Program is to serve women who are affected by multiple oppressions.

Peters graduated from UMass with a Bachelor of Arts in Human Services and then she got a graduate degree also at UMass in Organizational Development. She has been working at the Program since January, 1989. The Program was then called the "Third World Women's Program." Peters said she changed the name to encompass other multiply oppressed women such as lesbians, Jews, and the disabled. "It is important to make a bridge between oppressions," she said.

Peters organizes workshops and panels on women with multiple oppressions such as disabilities and learning disabilities. She also teaches the class "Social Diversity in Education," of the School of Education. This is a class that discusses such oppressions as racism, sexism, ableism, and homophobia.

She recently held a conference on women of color and mental health. Peters said a lot of women showed up and were interested in the subject, but when she tried to do a follow-up event, her funding was cut. "A lot of programming I have tried to do has been cut," she said. "After the first four months I took this job, the funding was frozen."

Peters said as a woman of color it is not just important to work on issues of race but also issues of gender. "You can't alleviate just one oppression. You have to work across the board."

It is important for UMass to recruit more students of color, she said. There are more students leaving than staying. "The administration has taken on the role of making the campus 'comfortable' but they have to make students of color more visible," she said.

She said UMass has to develop a policy that would not tolerate incidents of racism or homophobia on campus. The men who interrupted the film, "The Life and Times of Harvey Milk" should have been suspended, she said. "If they were suspended, that would send a message that these acts would not be tolerated and then people would be less likely to do them."

Peters said UMass has a long way to come on improving the accessbility of the campus to disabled people. "Elevators don't have bells that go off for the blind," she said. "There is a ramp at the Everywoman's Center, but disabled people cannot get to the second floor because there is no elevator."

Peters has a philosophy she lives by: "You have to lift as you climb." She said when one person learns the roots of their oppression or when a person who is in the dominant group understands how they oppress and in turn educates other people, there will more people moving up the ladder out of oppression.

In the future, Peters said she hopes the Everywoman's center can become more multicultural. "We need to become more visible to women of color," she said.

■ campus rape

Levy said she would like to see information and education integrated into the University through dormitory and social life on campus as well as the incorporation of information into courses and curriculum.

"[Rape] needs to be addressed on all different fronts," she said.

Levy said an important function of the Counselor Advocates lays in "believing women and giving them the message that [their being raped] is not their fault."

She said it is also important to educate victims of rape and relay the facts about the crime, which are often distorted through misinformation perpetuated by the media and society.

The Counselor Advocate program works on the "feminist self help model," Levy said, adding "it's an empowerment model helping women to regain control [after a rape]."

Levy said that she helps victims suffering from "Rape Trauma Syndrome" which consists of four stages: The victim may first encounter shock; next a denial period; followed by the re-emergence of issues around the rape; and lastly a time of integration where the experience is incorporated into the victim's life.

During this time Counselor Advocates support those who seek them out. Levy said short term counseling may span from one to 15 visits, and may deal with any of the issues around the incident.

The program offers legal and medical advocacy which could mean an advocate accompanying a victim to a hospital, to the police or even to court.

The center, located in Nelson House, may be reached for crisis intervention through their 24-hour rape hotline 545-0800.

Other area services available to victims of rape include: Victim/Witness at 586-5780; University Health Services at 549-2671; Mental Health Sevices at 545-2337; Counseling and Academic Development at 545-0333; and the Dean of Students at 545-2674.

Oliver G. Selfridge

Senior Scientist, GTE Research Labs

"Learning To Learn: A Lesson From Artificial Intelligence"

4:00 p.m., Wednesday, May 9, 1990

227 Herter Hall, University of Massachusetts – Amherst

Oliver Selfridge has been involved in computer science and AI for 35 years. His involvement in AI stems from the very roots of the discipline. He was a participant in the 1956 Dartmouth Summer Study, which is recognized as the beginning of AI. Selfridge has worked extensively over the years with Marvin Minsky and John McCarthy on exploring neural networks and machine learning. Selfridge's main interests are in learning, pattern recognition, hierarchical adaptive control and connectionist systems. He consults extensively for the United States Government, and has served on many government panels in the past. Selfridge belongs to many professional societies in his fields of interest, and in February of this year was elected a Fellow of AAAS, the American Association for the Advancement of Science. His talk "Learning to Learn: A Lesson From Artificial Intelligence" will focus on learning in intelligent computer systems as a three-fold process loop that should result in improvement.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES(March 21-April 19): Practicality is the key to lasting financial gains. Exercise more self-discipline. New avenues open up where your career is concerned. Plan entertainment that is both fun and inexpensive.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20): Spend money for something that will bring you greater peace of mind. You need to protect your mate's feelings. Lost items will resurface. If behind in your work, ask for an extension.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20): An odd occurrence disrupts the work day. Concentrate on projects you can complete by yourself. To avoid embarrassment, consult with your mate or partner before making a social commitment.

CANCER(June 21-July 22): A friend from the past will offer you an opportunity that presents certain obstacles. Take it anyway. Although you think you are being subtle, someone feels that you are tring to control him.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22): Be warm and gracious at work, but do not try to mix business with pleasure. Someone you have always found difficult could decide to champion your cause in the near future. Forgive and forget.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22): Someone may not live up to promises made. If you need information, ask again. Do not expect normal responses from someone who is jealous. Financial problems can be resolved if you sell something.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22): Financial matters are on the upswing. A health problem should be followed up with appropriate medical treatment. Do not attach too much meaning to a casual flirtation. Be more objective.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21): Protect someone else's secret at all costs. Pamper yourself! Make both major and minor changes in your personal life. Someone who has helped you in the past wants to play a major role in your future.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21): Do not let a close friend's disappointment make you feel guilty. An awaited package may be delayed. Use your private time productively. Speak your mind if someone has an unhealthy habit.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19): Use your magnetic personality to achieve your goals. Other people appreciate your down-to-earth approach. Attend to important communications; well-written letters work wonders.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb18): Keep track of all the little odds and ends today. Far-off locales are power zones. An elegant appearance helps you gain acceptance in a different social circle. Romance soars to new heights.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20): You are very appealing and persuasive today. Make contact where you feel most confident. Financial discussions hold great promise. Do whatever is necessary to make your mate feel secure.

Lightweight crew takes gold at NEs

Undefeated boat rocks Worcester waters, earns points trophy

By BRIAN MELLEY
Collegian Correspondent
and ADRIENNE MATT
Collegian Staff

WORCESTER — The University of Massachusetts men's lightweight eight edged past three rivals Saturday on Lake Quinsigamond to continue their undefeated season and win their first New England Invitational Rowing Championship. The win gave the entire Minuteman team enough points to capture the overall points trophy.

> "It was the most emotional race I have ever seen." – Paul Schor, oarsman

The race came down to the wire as all four crews, UMass, Tufts University, Coast Guard Academy and Rhode Island, passed the Quinsigamond Beach with less than 20 strokes to go and with no boat in a commanding lead. Screaming fans were left on the beach wondering who would win the race.

Varsity heavyweight oarsman Paul Schor, whose brother Dave rows in the lightweight boat, said it was the best race he had ever seen. "It was the most emotional race I've seen. All four boats passed by neck-and-neck, but UMass remained so controlled and composed that it seemed they would hold their two-seat lead. It was beautiful to watch."

All three boats finished within four second of UMass (6:03.6). URI finished second, Tufts took third and Coast Guard placed fourth. The UMass lights entered the race as the favorites, having beaten all of the crews during regular season competition. Last year, all four schools went to the Nationals, with URI returning home with the gold, Tufts with the silver and UMass placing third.

One reason this particular crew is so strong is that it holds a combination of experienced oarsmen. Senior oarsmen Brendan Morrissey and Ian Baring-Gould, as well as coxswain Stew Stokes, have previously fallen short of winning gold medals, having rowed the light boat for three years now.

Comprising the novice lightweight eight that took the Dad Vail Invitational last year were Nat Delmonzo, Mark Haley and Dave Schor. They, along with Chris Marino and Scott MacGregor, who were on the JV lightweight squad last year, are in the light boat. That JV light took the bronze last year at the Dad Vail Invitational.

The addition of a former heavy weight, Rich Scannell, gives the boat the muscle and experience needed to follow this weekend's victory with a similar showing next Saturday in Philadelphia's Scukill River at the Dad Vail, the equivalent of Division II Nationals.

The gold of the lightweights compounded by strong performances by other UMass boats, helped the squad to take the overall points trophy for the first time.

The novice teams held their own as the men's lightweights and women's second boats took the silver, edging out Coast Guard and Wesley, respectively.

The women's novice first took third behind Wesley and Tufts. The men's varsity and novice heavyweights also took third. The varsity boat finished behind Coast Guard and New Hampshire, the novice boat placed behind New Hampshire and Connecticut College.

Defending champs, women's varsity, placed a disappointing fourth, as did the women's JV boat. Last year the varsity boat brought home the silver from the Nationals. This year's boat holds a younger squad.

Wellesley College, Wesleyan University and Massachusetts Institute of Technology placed above the varsity women. Wellesley URI and Wesleyan finished ahead of the novice women.

The Dad Vail Inviational Championship will be raced on the Scukill River in Philadelphia, Pa., with first heats on Friday and finals on Saturday.

Women's track finishes third at New Englands

By DEBI LU COUTURIER
Collegian Correspondent

BURLINGTON, VT. — Despite the rain, the cold and small contingent of athletes, the University of Massachusetts women's track and field team garnered third place at the New England Championships in Burlington, Vt., Saturday.

Senior Shana Smith, in her final appearance in a UMass uniform, became the New England Champion in the 300-meter run. Smith ran the first mile with a time of 5:15, then broke from the pack and never looked back to finish with a personal record and ECAC qualifying time of 9:55.8.

Sophomore LeeAnn Ambrose prove to be the workhorse for UMass, capyuring 22 points. Ambrose repeated asw New England Champ in the 400-meter, running unchallenged with a time of 56.57. In a gutsy performance in the 200-meter, she placed second with a personal record time of 24.76, less than two tenths of a second behind nationally-ranked Mirian Knijn of Boston University. Ambrose also anchored both the 4x110-meter and 4x400-meter relays.

Senior Julie Muccini and freshman Lennice Johnson appeared unfazed by cold rain and wind to hurdle their best of this season. Muccini placed third and qualified for ECACs with a time of 63.75, while Johnson snagged fourth (64.25).

Driving rain didn't impede juniors Kathy Holt (39.07) and Cate Dean (39.42) who placed fourth and sixth, respectively, in the 1000-meter.

The relay teams once again proved to be consistent point-getters. The 4x100-meter team of Sue McFadyen, Johnson, Dana Smith and Ambrose ran a flawless race with smooth handoffs to place third with a time of 49.72. With Cathy Crocker as leadoff leg and Laura LaVallee, Becky Johnson and anchor Maureen Meldrim, the 4x800-meter relay team placed third with a time of 9:37.0.

The 4x400-meter relay team grabbed first despite a heart-stopping moment during a handoff to the anchor. Muccini led off and handed off to L. Johnson (0:58) who held the lead. Freshman Dana Smith extended the lead in the third leg, handing off to anchor Ambrose who dropped the baton. While Ambrose scrambled on the track, URI passed through the exchange and took the lead. She recovered in time to turn on the afterburners and retake the lead for a dramatic victory.

Freshman Rachel Castriotta took a fifth place in the discus with a throw of 122-8.

UMass baseball treks to Northeastern

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts baseball team is just three days away from the start of the Atlantic 10 Tournament. The Minutemen will face either George Washington (11-3, not including yesterday's two games against Penn State), or West Virginia (12-4).

Today the Minutemen trek down the Mass Pike for an encounter with the Northeastern Huskies. The Huskies played three games Sunday with Maine at Portland and lost two out of three. The Minutemen on the other hand took the weekend off and enjoyed the Spring Concert. [Saturday's game was rained out].

Today's games provides the Minutemen with a chance to get back into a baseball frame-of-mind, something the team desperately needs to do. This is a chance for UMass coach Mike Stone to get some of his pitchers some much needed work. It really would not be surprising to see everyone on the staff pitch.

The Huskies enter the contest with a 23-17 record. They have a team ERA of 4.67, led by Brian Hilliard's 4-1 record and 3.09 ERA.

Northeastern is clubbing the ball at a .300 clip topped by Tim Scannell's .350 average.

For anyone who has not seen the Northeastern field, it's not your everyday baseball diamond. Parsons Field has a grass infield and turf outfield. Unfamiliar outfielders will have to be wary of big bounces that bound over their heads.

TEAM LEADERS

Batting average: Drew Comeau .381, Derek Dana .341, Ian Torres .326.

RBIs: Torres 32, Comeau 31, Brian Bright 30.

Homeruns: Bright 9, Mike Tobin 5, Glenn DiSarcina 5.

Stolen bases: Steve Corradi 20, Tobin 16, DiSarcina 7.

Doubles: Comeau 18, Torres 12, Dana 8.

Triples: Corradi 4, Tobin and Bright 2.

Walks: Corradi 29, Comeau and Torres 20.

Slugging percentage: Comeau .646, Bright .579, Corradi .489.

On-base percentage: Comeau .481, Corradi .427, Torres .407.

PITCHING LEADERS

ERA: Jerry Creamer 3.00, Meaney 3.02, Dan O'Leary 4.06.

Strikeouts: Rich Graham 39, Creamer 29, Daryle Corriveau 28.

Wins: Meaney 5, Creamer 4, Graham and Jeff Toothaker 3.

Softball looks to end season on up note against Adelphi

The UMass softball team and Cherie DellAnno hope this is a familiar scene as they face Adelphi University in a doubleheader at 3 p.m. today at Totman Field.

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts softball team finishes off their regular season today as they take on the Panthers of Adelphi in a double header at Totman Field (3.pm).

The Minutewomen (25-18) are coming off of a doubleheader-split with Rutgers losing the first 0-7 and then rebounding in the second and taking it in nine innings, 4-3.

This is it for the Minutewomen. This is the time to pull any and all tricks out of the proverbial bag. The A-10's are next weekend and Adelphi will prove to be either a confidence boost or bust.

Adelphi (25-15-1) is on a five-game winning streak and are playing at the top of their game. During that streak they have beaten Connecticut, Rhode Island and Penn State, and will be looking to add UMass to that list.

The Panthers come to UMass with three big sticks in the line-up. Junior Chris Kelliher is leading Adelphi with a .364 average and is quickly followed by sophomore Lesley Perkins (no relation to Tony) who is batting .328 with 20 RBI's (6 game-winning), three triples and three doubles. The last of the big Panther bats belong to senior Jennifer Cardone, .325. Look for speed from Doreen Lumbra, she has 26 stolen bases.

The Minutewomen will hopefully still be charged-up from their extra-inning win against Rutgers (who finished with the best A-10 record). In order to be more of a force they must refrain from falling back and waiting for their breaks to happen, as was the case against U.R.I. and Providence. They can be a good team, this is no time to be flat.

The team batting average is .271 while teams are batting a feeble .193 against them. The pitchers are the owners of a 1.92 ERA. The Minutewomen have abused their opponents' ERA to the tune of a 2.76 ERA. They are a solid team, now is time to show it.

The A-10 starts Friday, but it would be a tremendous mistake to be looking ahead to that now. UMass must take this opportunity to re-establish their game.

WEATHER

Get out your shorts, it will be sunny and warm today with highs reaching 75 or 80.

Out-of-state students file lawsuit

Attorney represents students from state schools in tuition hike fight

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

Some 20 out-of-state students at the University of Massachusetts have become involved in a class action suit filed against the state to challenge the constitutionality of the $485 mid-semester tuition hike for out-of-state students.

Carl Valvo, a Boston attorney from the firm Cosgrove, Eisenburg, and Kiley, filed the suit April 17 in the U.S. District Court in Boston.

He is representing out-of-state students from all 27 Massachusetts state colleges and universities. Additionally, Valvo is encouraging all out-of-state student to file affidavits against the state.

The co-defendants in the suit are the Board of Regents of Higher Education and the presidents and trustees of all 27 Massachusetts state colleges and universities.

Aaron Pearlman, a member of the out-of-state student coalition at UMass, said the mid-semester increase was an illegal breech of contract by the administration.

"When we got our bill for this semester, there was no notice of the increase," Pearlman said. "The first bill was an agreement between the students and the administration about how much students would pay for this semester."

Valvo said the case differs for students who have already paid the increase and for students who have not paid. The deadline for payment for graduating seniors was May 7th and for non-graduating students, the bill is due in August.

"There are two separate problems in this case," Valvo said. "For the students who have already paid the increased fee, the state is arguing that is out of the federal court's jurisdiction to order "ultimate relief" for them."

Valvo said a federal order of "injunctive relief" must also be obtained to stop further collection of this fee and any subsequent punishments for students not paying.

Valvo said he is trying to obtain a preliminary injunction against the colleges and universities "against the threat of irreparable and immediate injury" by a federal judge.

This injunction will protect out-of-state students from being penalized by the colleges and universities for not paying the fee while the case is pending, he said. He said penalties could involve loss of housing and class registration as well as the withholding of grades.

Graduating seniors who did not pay the bill by the May 7 deadline could have their records and diplomas withheld by the University, Valvo said.

These seniors need to file affidavits immediately through the out-of-state student coalition so that the injunction can protect them, he said.

The out-of-state student coalition has recently decided to file for Registered Student Organization status, Pearlman said.

The coalition first formed during the undergraduate strike last semester.

"If we become an RSO, we can provide services for new out-of-state students and all students," Pearlman said. "It would help to get a cash flow going to copying the affividavits and posters about the lawsuit."

Pearlman said, as a personal recommendation, out-of-state students should not pay the increase because if the suit goes through, the money will be harder to get back from the state.

"As long as we go through with this suit and win, the state will never be able to raise tuition in the middle of the semester again."

Australia, US life-styles differ

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff

Although Ann Wadsworth has traveled to Australia almost every year to visit with her relatives, she said her experiences last year as a visiting student to the University of Adelaide were not quite what she expected.

"I always wanted to go back and see what it was like to live in Australia for a full year," said Wadsworth, a senior international business major at the University of Massachusetts who has dual citizenship in the U.S. and Australia. "I expected life there to be more like life in America."

Life in Australia is more relaxed compared to the competitive nature of life in the U.S., she said. For example, stores in Australia are open to 5 p.m. on weekdays, and not at all on the weekends.

The university system in Australia is not as competitive either, because there is no "Harvard/UMass type scale," she said. "There are only one or two [universities] per state, so a lot of people go the same [university], if they go at all."

According to Mary Elise Lamet, associate director of international programs at UMass, the University of Adelaide is one of seven universities slated to be represented in an information session today at 3 p.m. in campus center room 162.

Lamet said her husband, director of international programs Sterling Lamet, is slated to discuss study abroad at Curtin University of Technology, Griffith University, Northern Territory University, Queensland University of Technology, University of Melbourne, University of Sydney, and University of Technology in Sydney.

UMass already has a reciprocal exchange with University of Queensland and University of Wollongong, Lamet said.

"We anticipate increasing opportunities to study abroad in Australia," she said.

Alan Edwards, an Australian senior English/Literature major, said he wants to extend his visit from the University of Wollongong to UMass for another semester.

"The states are part of my world travel plan. [The exchange program] seemed like a good way to get to know people and see the states," Edwards said.

Edwards said he knew about American culture before coming to the U.S., because Australia is bombarded with American television and merchandise whether they want to be or not.

"I grew up with The Brady Bunch too," he said. He added that he was able to follow the 1988 U.S. presidential elections in Australia, whereas he found no mention in U.S. papers of the recent Australian national elections.

Professor Chen speaks against tobacco sales in Asian nations

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts public health professor Ted T.L. Chen said yesterday he plans to issue a strong condemnation of American tobacco trade practices in Asian countries in his testimony before Congress next Thursday.

In his testimony, scheduled on the same day the General Accounting Office report will be issued, Chen will report data he compiled about the impact of U.S. tobacco trade in Asia to the House Committee on Health.

"The tobacco trade is not like others, it is a trade for death," he said. "Our overseas sale of tobacco was not right to begin with. The U.S. has no business being the the biggest pusher for death."

Chen, a board member of the American Public Health Association and the executive secretary for the Asian American Association for Control of Tobacco, criticized the bullying tactics used by the U.S. government to force open the Asian tobacco markets. While forcing tobacco

American Jews called upon to work for peaceful Israel

Dr. Shaw Dallal discusses inequalities of legal, social structures

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

American Jews should recognize that a racist legal and social structure exists in Israel and a peaceful remedy will depend on their positive and rational cooperation, an expert on Israeli law said last night.

Dr. Shaw J. Dallal, professor of international law at Syracuse University, gave a presentation titled "Israeli Apartheid" to some 75 people in the University of Massachusetts Campus Center.

"The state of Israel is a state that promotes discrimination based on descent which is discrimination by definition," he said. "The moral obligation is on the Jewish community of the United States."

Several students from Hillel and the Student Alliance for Israel came to the lecture with signs protesting the lecture. disagreeing with his premise that Palestinians have lesser rights in Israel. They also objected to the comparison of Israel's structure to South Africa.

Dallal, a Palestinian who was born in Israel, cited laws concepted during the formation of the state of Israel which he said deny rights and privileges to Israeli citizens who are not of Jewish descent.

The law of return stipulates that only people born to Jewish mothers have a right to return to Israel and have Israeli citizenship, he said. The registration law, enacted in 1950, divides Israeli citizens into categories of Arab and Jewish nationalities, he said.

"Nationality and citizenship are not equivalent in Israel," he said. "Why can't I as a Palestinian live in my hometown of Jerusalem where I was born? I'm willing to share Jerusalem with Christians, Moslems, and Jews but I'll be damned to have to leave my land because I didn't convert to Judaism."

In 1953, the status law was devised in Israel which gave people of Jewish nationality greater rights and privileges. He said people of Jewish descent are allowed certain positions in Israeli's parliamentary government which are denied to Palestinian citizens.

Race to benefit Heart Association

North Pleasant Social Club, Delta Zeta set up 'dash for cash'

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

It's that time a year again: time to settle down and study for finals. Ugh. Or, better yet, it's that time a year to find diversions to studying.

So you need diversions.

Well, you are in luck as the North Pleasant Social Club and the Delta Zeta sorority are prepared to provide that needed diversion this Sunday with the first annual Dash for Cash, a 2.4 mile road race with the proceeds benefiting the American Heart Association.

The race will begin and end at the Haigis Mall and circle around the main campus. The race will have the 200 expected participants traveling from the Haigis Mall to Commonwealth Avenue, then up Governors Drive, and then turning onto North Pleasant ending back at the Haigis Mall, said Paul Silva, the member of the club organizing the event.

Silva said that people who want to run the race, which begins at 1 p.m., can pre-register on the Campus Center concourse or the Newman Center for $5. He said participants can register on Sunday at Haigis Mall for $6.

Silva said the proceeds will help an important cause. "We have all been close to someone who has died of heart disease. This will help."

The first 30 runners to cross the finish line will earn themselves a T-shirt. Gift certificates and a fish tank from Animal City will also be awarded, he said.

Pinocchio Restaurant has also jumped on the bandwagon and promised $1 off a pizza it delivers when you mention the road race when ordering.

Brian Linehan, a member of the North Pleasant Social Club, said the purpose of Sunday's run means a great deal to him after a friend he plays ice hockey with suffered a heart attack while skating.

"At first when the club was looking to support the Heart Association it didn't mean that much to me," he said. "But it's become more and more important to me personally. It's the number one cause of death in the U.S."

Linehan, who hopes to live at the club next semester, said he does not expect any trouble over the 2.4 mile run.

"I've been training my whole life," said Linehan, an active hockey player and all-around athlete. "I'll have no problem."

The Celts have been knicked out, the Bruins aren't on, the Sox are on but who cares and you aren't gonna study on Sunday anyways. So get up early run the race and help a good cause.

Fraternity brothers aid at track meet

Lambda Chi Alpha volunteers to help Special Olympians

By CHRIS SHADOIAN
Collegian Correspondent

Some 15 Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity brothers volunteered to help out at the Special Olympics track and field meet at Smith College Saturday.

The brothers helped run all of the track events and some of the field events, according to Cathy Sherrill, a volunteer for Special Olympics. The brothers did a great job helping out at the meet, she said.

"They were terrific," she said, adding that she was very pleased to see a bunch of college guys come down to a Special Olympics event and stay and help out.

Sherrill said she thought the brothers' presense at the event made a difference to the organizers and the participants as some of the other scheduled volunteers did not show up.

Stephen Cefalo, one of the volunteering brothers, said he did make a few friends and had a lot of fun.

"We had a great time," he said. Cefalo also said that helping out with Special Olympics was gratifying and that he would definitely do it again.

Perry said the brothers arrived at 8 a.m. to help set things up. The day began at 9:30 a.m. when the Olympic torch was run into the arena. The track events, including the 50 meter dash, the 400 meter run and the mile, began at 10 a.m.

The three field competitions held were the shotput, the standing long jump and the high jump. Both the high jump and the shotput were held outside. All the other events were held on the indoor track

According to Perry, Saturday's games were qualifying events for this year's summer games to be held in June at Springfield College. This will be the first time the summer Special Olympics games have been held in the western part of the state. The summer games included all the track and field events as well as swimming, equestrian competition, volleyball and softball.

Perry said that about 155 local athletes should qualify for the summer games.

However, Perry stressed the need for more Special Olympics volunteers. He said that it's great when groups like Lambda Chi Alpha volunteer but Special Olympics always needs more.

"Volunteers are what make Special Olympics work," he said.

Jean Sadowski, the volunteer chairwoman for Saturday's games, said the brothers were great. "They were super," she said. "Absolutely super."

George Perry, the Special Olympics manger for the greater Hampshire County area, said he was incredibly pleased to have the brothers helping out. "They just did an outstanding job," he said. Perry said that having the brothers there really made things run smoothly from start to finish.

Freed hostage remains hospitalized

Reed receives medical care after 44 months as prisoner

WASHINGTON (AP) — Freed hostage Frank Reed is in good spirits, sleeps well and is beginning to regain some of the approximately 50 pounds he lost in captivity, a brief medical report said Tuesday.

However, Reed is expected to remain hospitalized for about another week, the Air Force said in a statement.

"He tends to tire easily, so the medical staff has slowed down the examination schedule and revised earlier estimates of the length of time it will take to complete our procedures," the statement said.

The Air Force refused to release any specific findings on Reed's physical or mental condition, citing his request for privacy. Reed has hired an agent to handle scores of requests for interviews, an Air Force spokesman said.

The 57-year-old Reed, freed by his Islamic kidnappers April 30, is being given a thorough medical evaluation, including examinations of his teeth, eyes, ears, nose, throat, lungs and heart.

He also has been undergoing X-rays and laboratory tests at the Malcolm Grow Air Force Medical Center at Andrews Air Force Base in suburban Maryland since his arrival from Germany last Friday.

At a news conference Sunday, Reed gave reporters a chilling account of his 44 months in captivity. He said his captors savagely beat him, breaking his nose and jaw, fracturing his ribs and feet and bloodying his kidneys.

"Thank God they didn't kill me," he said. "I was one of their pet whackers."

Meanwhile, Peggy Say, the sister of hostage Terry Anderson, confirmed Tuesday that she met for the first time with Ambassador Moshe Arad to urge Israel to release Shiite detainees to help win the freedom of Western captives.

The 30-minute meeting took place at the ambassador's residence April 27.

"I made a formal request on behalf of the hostages' families that Israel release Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid and the illegally detained Shiite prisoners," Mrs. Say said. "Mr. Arad was very kind to me but reminded me they were used to dealing with the government. But I felt there was no harm in my making the request."

Mrs. Say said Arad was careful not to give her any false hope that her request would be met. "My deepest hope," Mrs. Say said, "is that Israel will act upon the reasonable request by the captors that those illegally detained will be released.

"I also pray that the captors will respond to Isreal's reasonable request that their three hostages be released," she said. 'With the cooperation of all the parties involved, we could end this nightmare in the near future."

Ruth Yaron, a spokeswoman for the Isreali embassy, said Arad sympathized with Mrs. Say's concerns.

"The ambassador expressed to Mrs. Say that we have our shared interests there. We also have soldiers of ours that are in the hands of the Hezbollah and we have other soldiers who are still missing in action," Mrs. Yaron said.

"Isreal is willing to release those detinees that are held by us for terrorist actions if this could bring about the release of all Isreali prisoners as well as the release of the Western hostages," she said.

The embassy said the detainees held by Isreal are terrorists, not hostages.

"There is no room for any comparison between them and the hostages who are innocent citizens kidnapped by the Hezbollah organization and Lebanese organizations affiliated with it," the embassy said.

In the Middle East, the commander of an Isreali-backed militia said Monday that he won't release any of the 300 Shiite prisoners his group holds unless efforts are made to free militiamen and Isreali soldiers held by the Shiites.

companies in this country to place warning labels on cigarette packages and restricting their advertising, Chen said, the U.S. government forces Asian governments to allow American tobacco companies to conduct business on their own terms.

Using Act 301 of the 1974 Trade Act as a weapon, he said the United States forces Asian governments to open the markets or face severe economic repercussions.

Chen said the advertising techniques used by American companies specifically target the untapped markets of Asian women and youths. "They have been trying to convert non-smokers into smokers," he said.

Chen took aim at the techniques used by of the tobacco companies in Asia saying: "Magazines and billboards advertise cigarettes as the American dream. In the streets of Japan and Korea [the American tobacco companies] have beautiful women passing out free cigarettes as promotional items. If people turn in empty packages of cigarettes, they can win tickets to rock concerts."

As a result of the opening Asian market, the smoking rate in those countries has alarming increased, he said. Since the opening, in Taiwan there has been a 10 percent increase in smoking among high school students, Chen said.

He said he was most disturbed that several scientists have predicted that 25 million Asian youths will die due to smoking-related diseases.

The American "forcing open" of markets reminds many Asians of the gunboat diplomacy practiced by Great Britain in the 19th century. "The memory of the opium wars and gunboat diplomacy is still deeply imprinted in the minds of Asians," Chen said.

Chen suggested the U.S. government stop using economic pressure to give special privileges for American tobacco companies in doing business in Asian countries.

"[Tobacco] companies should also have to conform to U.S. codes, using warning labels and printing the percentages of tar and nicotine on the cigarette packages," he said.

Chen, who has worked at the University since 1971, is presently working on a $3.5 million grant project devoted to smoking intervention for the Black population.

Last month Chen received a plaque from the government of Thailand commemorating his efforts in battling the U.S. tobacco industry and the new "opium war" against Asians.

MULTICULTURAL AFFAIRS

A long overdue calling out session

Weakness: the anatomy of a group disease

This will not be a redundant article focusing on the trials and tribulations of Blacks on the University of Massachusetts at Amherst campus, nor will it be an article designed to condone past and present wrong-doings amongst the African-American community at the University.

On the contrary, this article will draw attention to the regressive tendencies that are dessicating the Black community. Hence, this article is, in essence, what is known in the African-American community as a "calling out session."

As I search my mind for an adjective that accurately sums up the prevalent mentality among the African-American community, I continually conjure up a single word — weak.

Derrick X

Quite naturally, this "insubordinate" perception will be bitterly refuted by many, especially those who are living examples of the perception. How can a group of "conscious Black people" who are fortunate enough to have a building named after a martyr like Malcom X, show no respect or appreciation for his work even on his birthday? It's beyond my comprehension.

However, what can I expect from a bunch of stagnant negroes whose only goals are to be one of the following:

a) Best lovers on campus.

b) The "dopest" Fraternity/Sorority on the yard.

c) The best at cluttering up the campus air-waves with some idle headed gossip, most of which would blatantly insult the intelligence of a 10-year-old.

Moreover, this article would be rendered incomplete without bringing to light our arrogant world-renowned Basketball team which acts as though it receives countless numbers of offers from NBA teams and is constantly entertained by celebrities such as heads of governments.

Needless to say, one would expect these fantastic Ball players to be NBA first roundpicks. That would serve to explain their arrogance (hopefully).

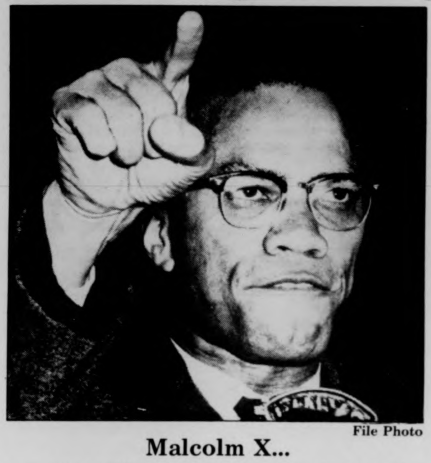
Intertwined with the above, at least as far as arrogance goes, are our elite and most important negroes (should I say "house"negroes) who are so blessed not to live on the "field" of the Amherst plantation (yes, I am referring to UMass), but to actually live in the house of the "master."

I am referring to the Charles Drew House at Amherst College. This college is named after the plantation master —- so-called Lord Jeffrey Amherst. These persons should be rightfully labelled "house" negroes.

On a recent visit to the master's house I was rudely received by a roomful of people with "black faces" and "white masks"(I am quoting our great revolutionary brother, Frantz Fanon).

Of course, the initial response of these "house" negroes was one of detest. Ironically enough, I was allowed to enter the master's house! However, as soon as I was seen by all the friendly folks present, the ongoing conversation ended.

I became the center of attention and conversation. My attempts to communicate were of no avail. Indeed, there was an overt "freeze" placed upon me by my brothers and sisters — so severe, that I was, without the actual words being said, asked to leave.



File Photo

Malcolm X...

I have attempted, in this brief session, to make it known to my brothers and sisters that we as a people must rid ourselves of this tenacious and clandestine mentality that shapes the way we view one another. We acquired this way of thinking from our white oppressors.

In retrospect, the thoughts embodied in all of the above, call for a collective impeachment of our misleading and opportunistic leadership. I would like to point a firm finger at those who sold out the cries and requests of the masses of Black people during the New Africa House takeover for a box of shrimp-fried rice and a fortune cookie.

A more candid perception would be the blatant manner in which sincere and energetic students were misled by "respected" Afro-American faculty. These same faculty, despite their affiliation with the administration, were allowed to enter the premises with a warm and heart-felt reception from everyone, including the pessimistic.

All this was done in the name of brotherhood. I later came to find, along with many of my brothers and sisters, that the strings are often transparent and you don't always know who the puppet is — your best friend, your professor, or even a highly "respected" faculty member from the community.

To many young people, myself included, it was indeed a sight for sore eyes to see these "respected" people aiding us in our struggle. However, to our surprise, the captain of "the ship to freedom" turned out to be the slave-master himself with his high-yellow make-up and on-going cold.

Unfortunately, this way of thinking has gone through a stage of mitosis. It is not only an old disease but a young disease as well. One may even label it hereditary, passed on from court-jester to court-jester.

One example, of when the youthful reared its head, was when Farrakhan came to campus. Those who were involved in getting Minister Farrakhan here, and I commend them, place themselves behind the F.O.I. amongst the rest of the African elite, causing an acute need for sunglasses due to the glare coming from their over-emphasized smiles.

Nonetheless, what really grabs the heart is to see my brothers and sisters sitting in their usual style turn around and mimic the F.O.I. sitting posture; clearly, a noteworthy embarrassment stemming from a lack of leadership.

> "...we as a people must rid ourselves of this tenacious and clandestine mentality that shapes the way we view one another. We acquired this way of thinking from our White oppressors."

At this point, I am compelled to address my African brothers and sisters from abroad, who are fortunate enough to speak the languages, live the culture, know the history and see what I myself, along with many of my fellow African-Americans, have been stripped of and can only dream about.

You must disrobe yourself of aristocratic perceptions. When you are dealing with your brothers and sisters here in America, you are one of my own just as I am one of you. Without me there can be no you.

We are joined at the hip and in the mind, and our resurrection is only possible through collaboration, not isolation. We as people of African Blood must transcend any and all obstacles which have held us in darkness for so long.

I hope that many of the people that I have alluded to are reading this article. You will recognize yourselves easily.

Yes, I am speaking about prominent personalities including: pseudo-Africans and African Americans. Also, those assimilated negroes who run around in tie-dye shirts and braids with "Aunt Jemima" scarfs and the continent of Africa around their necks (of which they probably couldn't name five countries, let alone their location).

I am addressing our arrogant NBA hopefuls, our profane artist on the concourse and our evasive heads of the Student Government Association. No, I have not forgotten the low-moraled, flesh-oriented, administration and faculty members, or the undercover, non-pigmented loving, capitalist-thinking African exchange students.

You know who you are. Let it be hereby decreed that you are being watched, and this unacceptable social decorum shall be, and must be, dismantled by any means necessary.

Derrick X is a UMass Student.

The Conquistadorean lineage divides Latinos

A note to my Latin American Brothers and Sisters. My name is Tomas Pascual Garcia. I was born in Austin Texas which was once Mexican territory, once Native American. I was not privileged to grow up in Mexico and have lost my language in this Euro-Anglicized country. I am not proud of that fact.

We all get bleached in this country. Some are bleached so white that they do not feel comfortable around their own people and strive to be what they are not and can never become.

I grew up in an environment that subjects us all to negative, stereotypical depictions of A.L.A.N.A.(African, Latin American, Asian, and Native American) peoples. I grew up with Speedy Gonzales and little gringos calling me Mexican jumping bean.

Under this mental conditioning, it is shameful to hold onto any aspect of your original culture. Unfortunately I am one of many Latin Americans who fall victim to this at a very young age in this country and scorned their culture and heritage.

Fortunately the poisonous bleach did not reach my heart and soul. I see very clearly now the subtle and nearly invisible mechanism that has been set up to whitewash us all.

I think that we need to do a little calling out within our own community. I am sad to see the divisions amongst us. While conversing with a Salavadorian sister about the issue of divisions within the Latin American community, she agreed that it is a serious problem. She mentioned that she does not have very many friends from Puerto Rico, for example, because of what she deemed as class and socio-economic divisions.

What I see is that many of the Latin American students here in the Happy Valley have a lot of dough and an elite mentality that is divisive and detrimental to our community's unity. Our history of bloody repression by the original colonizers, be they Anglo or Spanish, is one and the same. We all got screwed and continue to get screwed, be it in inner-city U.S. or in the mountains of Peru.

Tomas Garcia

Given this fact how is it that we allow ourselves to be divided? The reason is that there are those of us who believe that they are white. There is a longing to somehow deny our common Native American ancestry as well as our African American blood.

My neighborhood is a battle zone today, where young children pack pieces. But I was always received with respect and compassion by my Latino neighbors who suffered and jammed with all of us.

Even at home the divisions exist. Dominicans don't like Puerto Ricans. Puerto Ricans don't like Cubans. And yet there is a dynamic here at UMass that does not exist back around the way.

I am referring to the stinking, snobbish mentality that I have been introduced to here at the University. Whereas I have to scrounge to get a bus ticket to get from Boston to Amherst, others simply charge a call to daddy and ask him to wire a plane ticket to the Island. The issue is class and it divides.

Who are our leaders back home? Why do they all have white skin? Panama has a lily white Endara. Salvador has Christiani, also white. Puerto Rico has Hernandez Colon, also white. The Native American peoples still live and are the majority of the people in countries like Equador, Peru, Guatemala, Bolivia and my own homeland, Mexico. Many of them do not speak the Spanish of their Conquistadorian oppressors.

How many Latin Americans can speak a word of a Native American language? Few Latin Americans, especially those from poor backgrounds, can deny Native American blood no matter how hard they try to believe they are white.

Why is it that when our Panamanian people are wasted by US gringos, not a word of protest is murmured by this Latin American community at UMass? It seems that Latin American identity here is built on speaking Spanish and dancing to meringue and salsa, not fighting colonial repression along with other peoples of color.

It is necessary for those of us from the diaspora to rediscover our cultural identity by reaching out to native Latin American peoples. It is also essential that they understand the roots of our alienation, and learn from the hard experiences that we undergo in the inner-city. We cannot deny our reflections.

■ Dallal discusses Israel

American Jews can most successfully protest Israel's racist policies, he said, because most non-Jewish people are afraid they will be called anti-Semitic if they speak out against Israel or U.S. government aid to Israel.

He said he recognizes the persecution that Jews have suffered historically, but did not accept the past suffrage of Jews as a sufficient explanation for the hostile policies toward the Palestinians.

"You don't solve the problem of the persecution of the Jews by imposing on the people of Palestine,"he said. "We don't want to destroy this tiny sliver of land, we want to share it."

Bush's tax plan brings criticism

WASHINGTON (AP) — As President Bush's new-taxes trial balloon rose over Washington Tuesday, one of the people watching was the chief victim of the no-new-taxes pledge: Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

"The no-new-taxes pledge during the campaign was as big a fraud as the Boston Harbor routine. And it's kind of sad, frankly," Dukakis said during a visit here Tuesday.

The governor's comments came during a day of feverish activity at the White House as President Bush conferred with congressional Republicans over the idea of raising some taxes.

Bush continued to rule out raising income taxes as a way of coping with the federal deficit. But Republican lawmakers said the President is willing to discuss other tax increases, ranging from a national sales tax to higher levies on alcohol and cigarettes.

Bush's line during the campaign — "Read my lips: no new taxes" - was among the most enduring of the campaign. The pledge set Bush in sharp relief against Dukakis, the Democratic nominee who said nothing could be ruled out as a weapon against the deficit.

"I know it was effective and the election is over," Dukakis said. "But to make that kind of commitment given the size of the federal deficit, this (savings and loan) disaster which is going to cost the people of this country hundreds and hundreds of billions, was irresponsible."

The pledge, Dukakis said, "was a fraud on the American public and 15 month after the inauguration, we all now know just what a fraud it is."

Dukakis, who has a budget deficit of his own in Massachusetts, spoke to reporters in a hallway in the Capitol building after meeting with other governors and legislators on ways to reduce the economic impact of declining defense spending.

At one point in the encounter, House Minority Whip Newt Gingrich, R-Ga, walked by shortly after returning from a White House meeting with Bush.

"Newt! How are you?" Dukakis called out. "No new taxes. You guys are going to be chocking badly."

Gingrich simply smiled in return.

Gingrich was among those Republicans disturbed by Bush's tax talk.

He said earlier in the day that Republicans would not agree to any plan that would hurt them in an election year.

"I'm not going to vote for anything which causes us to lose politically...and we're not going to agree to stupid deals," Gingrich said.

TRIBUTE TO A UMASS BLOOD DONOR

No badge of service does he wear,
He lives, a "Hero" unaware,
A man who rolls his sleeve to give,
His blood, to help another live.
Who gives without re turn of fee,
In simple answer to a plea
That flush of health again may glow
On cheeks of one he'll never know.
His blood a new-born babe may save
From yawning brink of early grave,
That child, so weak and small today,
A Hero's role may later play.
Or one, a prey to accident,
By his blood new strength is lent.
His blood may help a surgeon's knife.
Bridge the gap from death to life.
No, none of these will know his name,
Nor see it carved on walls of fame;
But we who toil that man may live,
A hearty, humble "Thank You" give.
Give Blood!
Give Life!

Spineless men perpetuate rape

As a rape survivor and a woman, I was deeply affected upon hearing about the rape that was reported last Tuesday at UMass. I cried bitter tears of frustration and anger because I already have to worry about the person who raped me who is still on campus.

Amy Henry

Very little is being done by the men on this campus and by the administration to combat violence against women. It was unusual for the Collegian to print that the rape occurred. It is even more unusual that an administration who "would do anything to assure its students' safety," as said by Provost O'Brien at a recent date rape conference, has not had any public reaction to this rape.

O'Brien said he was a symbolic figure at this conference and he awaited our collective report on how to address the issue of date rape on campus. He certainly was a symbolic figure because he left the conference as soon as he had finished his token speech and appearance. He symbolizes the rest of the bureaucrats at UMass who have to be shoved off their asses to really do anything for the students.

As for the men on this campus, I am not surprised that there are very few who are rallying around this issue and taking any kind of action. Most of them probably still think rape is a "women's issue."

It is important for women to empower and educate themselves on rape. But I am sick of mainly women caring and taking action on it.

It is time for men to start taking some responsibility for the problem of date rape on campus. After all they are the perpetrators of this violence, and it is time for them to start educating themselves about it.

Most men will not take this educational process on themselves because they do not understand the fear of being physically, sexually and emotionally violated. Even if they are interested in the issue of rape, they would probably expect their girlfriend or a female friend to educate them on it.

There are many men who have said to me that they are concerned about rape. But at the same time, they will laugh when their friends make a sexist joke. These kinds of spineless men keep the cycle of sexism going, which then turns into a cycle of violence.

Men who minimize sexist remarks do not realize how damaging they can be to women, and are adding to a society that already demeans and objectifies women in magazines, TV, and pornography.

Where do we start to tackle this problem that is so widespread on this campus and in the world? We should start with new students. In their orientation, men should be educated on the seriousness of date rape and women should be warned about safety.

Issues of violence against women should be thoroughly integrated into the residence halls and other course curriculums on campus. An Everyman's Center should be started to create a safe place for men to address issues of violence against women, men's roles in society, and many other issues surrounding men as oppressors.

Until any real commitment is made by the faculty, administration and men on the campus, I fear for every woman's life and safety here and in the world.

Keep the vision alive for the young

At every turn, we are instructed results are everything: Who won the election? What are your exam scores? Did you buy the new car? Yet this degrading mindset has produced the "end-justifies-the-means" approach to life.

The obsession with winning at any cost in elections has led to candidates who tailor their message to what is most popular at the moment; in sports, athletes are denied instruction in discipline, teamplay and fellowship; the excessive emphasis on exam scores or grades diminishes the student's personal search for meaning.

We are being mesmerized. And our capacity to dream is at risk.

Our young people are especially victimized by this shrinkage of vision. The innate restlessness of the young is being twisted. We are collectively making it harder for the young to be inspired.

By insisting conformity, we risk discarding the best that humankind has achieved. In an age that craves for vision our young are entrapped in VCRs, SAT scores and the American flag.

While access to movies, academic achievement and love of country are legitimate, are the young choosing these values or are they being badgered into accepting them?

How many of us as parents or teachers instruct our charges about the varying qualities of film? That grades are not the full measure of learning? Or that seeing flaws in our nation, and striving to improve them, is in any patriotism worth the name?

Much of the malaise of youth is an outgrowth of our own limitations. Whatever their faults, teens are observers of adults.

We must do better at showing them that commitment to a cause, whether it be writing a novel or healing the downtrodden or working for peace, is noble.

We are in the midst of a national crisis of confidence. And, unless people show the way, "business as usual" will crush us.

Signs of this scourge are already all around us.

The truth about Israeli policies

There is a way to clear up the accusations and questions regarding the Israeli/Palestinian controversy as well as to clarify Israel's supposed similarities to the Apartheid state of South Africa. This way is devoid of all opinion and sentiment: it's called fact, and it's something this University has seen little of in written denouncements of Israel.

Stephanie Sigelman

The truth regarding Israel's policies on legal consultation and rights most certainly is not to forbid such things to Palestinians; quite the contrary actually. Religious courts share jurisdiction often times with civil courts in a number of areas. There are FOUR Moslem religious courts in Israel, appeals from which may be taken to the Moslem Appeals Court which sits in Jerusalem. Other courts exist for the Catholic, Protestant, Greek Orthodox, Melkite, Maronite and Druze communities, all of whom have their own jurisdiction.

This tactic of pulling out isolated cases of supposed Israeli brutality and drawing drastic conclusions, therefore (that Israel is, say, an Apartheid state), is ridiculous if for no other reason than it completely takes the situation out of context.

First of all, Israel has confronted since independence, May 14, 1948, what has been referred to as "one long war" with neighbors on all sides of her. On May 15, 1948 the combined armies of Egypt, Jordan, Iraq, Syria, and Lebanon, assisted by forces from Saudi Arabia, launched their invasion on newly-born Israel. By July, 1949, armistices would be agreed to with Egypt, Lebanon, Syria and Jordan. But seven years later war was renewed following numerous Arab violations of the 1949 armistice.

Then came the 1967 war, sparked by a massive program of military mobilization by both Egypt and Syria, placing Israel in a most precarious situation. Israel captured the entire Sinai desert to the south and the Golan Heights to the north, and the West Bank of the Jordan River to the east. After the war, Israel made several offers to exchange the captured territories for peace treaties, not renewed armistices.

But at the August 1967 Arab Summit held in Khartoum, Sudan, the Arab governments announced their "three no" doctrine: "No recognition. No negotiation. No Peace." After the six-day war came the Yom Kippur war. And in between all this, and continuing today, are smaller-scale terrorist attacks. Therefore, the quest for secure borders has become the essence of Israeli policy since 1948.

The above statements are facts; facts that paint an undeniable picture of the necessity for strong defensive actions on the part of Israel. The isolated incidences of Israeli brutality, designed to pull at the heartstrings of the unknowing in terms of the Middle East situation, go both ways. Equally graphic and unprovoked terrorism against innocent civilians has been the primary tactic for the Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO), including hijacking plane-loads of Americans.

As for the Apartheid issue, Israel may have some economic trade ties to South African countries but it is NOT an Apartheid state. It is not a small minority of people oppressing a majority. Jews are overwhelmingly the majority. Secondly, Israeli policies AND practices are ones of freedom and justice in so much as is possible while still insuring national security.

Israel is forced to export an item it does produce successfully: military equipment. It may have some ties in this respect to South African countries. But maybe if Israel has the opportunity for peace, it could reduce its military exports to these countries as it scaled back its own military expenditures.

If it is unrealistic for me to hope for peace in the Middle East at this time, I should at least be able to hope that before someone criticizes Israel for her actions, they get their facts straight.

Providing vital services to Vietnam veterans long overdue

Theodore Roosevelt once said, "A man who is good enough to fight for his country is good enough to be given a square deal afterward." Unfortunately, for many of America's Vietnam veterans, when they returned home from the war, they fell between the cracks of society.

Either on the combat line or on the streets, some soldiers depended on drugs and alcohol to forget the reality of war. In the United States, there are approximately 300,000 homeless and the veterans represent 30 to 50 percent of the adult male homeless population. This tragedy is a national wound which must be healed.

Between 1956 and 1973, when the Vietnam veterans were on their tour, many of them took advantage of marijuana that was easily accessible in Asia. They used substance abuse as a means of escaping the reality of day to day combat.

When the veterans returned home from war, they expected support from the government and the people. Unfortunately, they were not considered "heroes" like the World War II soldiers. The general populous who protested the war ignored and scorned the veterans.

Without support, no substantial income, little savings and no job skills, many soldiers isolated themselves from society. With federal finances, job training and psychiatric counseling at a low, programs were unable to provide for these needs, and the soldiers were not able to cope with the effects of war.

Problems included the urge to kill, nightmares and violence. Now, 20 years later, these men roam America's streets.

Since 1980, the issue of the homeless has had increasing media coverage due to policy changes in social service programs. The government is decreasing welfare benefits because a majority of the homeless are abusing these privileges by not working so that they may collect food stamps, welfare money and health insurance.

Christine Hart

Although statistics are not kept and it is impossible to generalize a human condition, the veterans may be considered the "hardcore homeless." With the deinstitutionalization of hospitals, additional veterans are now wandering the streets.

It is the responsibility of Americans to help our veterans who were not given the opportunity to ease into society.

We owe them a debt for fighting for freedom and democracy for a country they cherished. Without their assistance, their war will never be over.

These men represent a significant portion of the homeless population who had no control over their fate. They were not physically decrepit enough to take advantage of the Veterans hospitals. The tragedy of all this is that 20 years later this problem is finally being exposed by the government.

These men are not looking for handouts, just guidance. The government needs to establish programs to access the needs of the veterans so that they can finally leave the Vietnam War in the past.

The "Comprehensive Service Program for Homeless Veterans" proposed by U.S. Rep. Joseph P. Kennedy II will help to solve this persistent problem when implemented over the next six months.

The proposal addresses three main concerns of the Vietnam veterans: First, we must provide a health care system that is flexible. This must allow the homeless veterans to drop in when they need care instead of sending them away with an appointment.

Secondly, we must be able to provide affordable housing in a supportive environment which will get the veterans off the street.

Finally, we must be able to provide job training and skills in order that they can develop assurance and independence.

Kennedy's proposal, if implemented, may not solve the problem completely, but at least society will be taking responsibility for their veterans, by giving them help, respect and encouragement that is long overdue.

Rock critic: no censorship

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

Rock critic and author Dave Marsh spoke in the Student Union Ballroom last night about censorship in pop music and the hypocrisy of special interest groups such as the Parents Music Resource Center (PMRC), who Marsh charged with perpetuating racism.

"Censorship is not something that's going to happen in rock music," said Marsh, "it is happening. Our government doesn't approve of rock music, and it doesn't allow what it doesn't approve.

"Pop music is the one part of society where a full and frank discussion of issues is still allowed. There is stuff in music that Spike Lee wouldn't dream of doing a movie about. Do the Right Thing only scratches the surface of what hip-hop is about."

Marsh questioned the motives of the PMRC, especially its leaders, wife of Senator Al Gore, Tipper, and wife of Secretary of State James Baker, Susan. He said Susan Baker preaches morality, yet her husband, James, "ran the most racist campaign since the Reconstruction" when he used Black man Willie Horton, a convict who committed murdered while on Dukakis' furlough program, in Bush's Presidential campaign.

"Rock and roll, rap and heavy metal represent a problem [for the PMRC] because it's about race mixing. It's about races getting together and digging the same thing," Marsh said. "People like the PMRC, Al Gore, Jimmy Swaggart and James Baker are interested in keeping Black people and White people separate. Rock lets White people see the world through Black people's eyes."

Marsh said, "Tipper Gore called the rock world 'the dark underbelly of society.' She's really afraid it's the true face of society."

Marsh cited bands such as the rap group N.W.A., who have been persecuted for rebelling against authority. The FBI, and its assistant director Milt Ahlerich, took "an official position" against N.W.A.'s biggest hit, "Fuck tha Police," although Ahlerich confessed to Marsh that nobody in the Bureau had ever heard the song.

"It's not a song about killing police," Marsh said. "It's a song that says, 'If you fuck with me, I'll fuck with you.'"

Marsh said that although the local police banned N.W.A. from playing the song in concert, a preacher in Toledo, who thought the song's language was vile, said it must be sung for its strong social content. When the band tried to play the song in Detroit, undercover police rushed the stage hurling M 80 explosives. They chased the band back to the hotel and detained them there.

"What country are we talking about here?" Marsh asked. "We're talking about America, but it's the America of George Wallace and McCarthy. It's the America Bush and Reagan want. Stars and stripes and swastikas. The thought police are here."

Marsh criticized the PMRC for shifting the focus of rock and using charges such as racism as a vehicle to get back to the Christian ethic. He said, "Groups like 2 Live Crew should be challenged for their sexism. All [the PMRC] has done is make it harder for me to criticize Luke Skyywalker [of 2 Live Crew] because I've got to defend his freedom of speech first."

Faculty art impressive

By STEVE CLARK
Collegian Correspondent

The R. Michelson Gallery in Amherst is featuring an impressive variety of artwork by the UMass faculty this week. Paintings, sculptures, and computer generated art represent much of what's on display, and each style of artwork complements the other in this show quite successfully.

Much of the emphasis of the show is placed on technology; Professor Dale Schlappi's Cloud Fragment Series is just one example of this emphasis. Schlappi said his collection consists of "drawings which are done with a plotter and program generation," and the result is a series of spectacular, computer-drawn images of clouds which seem almost impossible to draw manually.

On the wall near Schlappi's work hangs a large oil on canvas painting by Professor John Roy, called "Kitchen Window". Roy's work seems to jump out at the viewer; in its purest form it is simply a view from a window, but this image takes on a futuristic, neonlike intensity due to the artist's addition of bright reds, oranges and greens. The effect is breathtaking, giving one the idea that this is a portrait affected in some way by the high-technology video age in which we are living.

The emphasis on technology doesn't stop there. Professor Robert Mallary's works expand on the theme, and are products of the artist's mind and "a relatively inexpensive ATARI 1040 personal computer," according to a label next to his work.

Other parts of the show that are not centered on technology succeed equally well. Professor James Hendricks' collection of paintings are colorful, bright, visually exciting pieces which easily catch attention. They represent nothing particularly physical; the celebratory feeling of the paintings seems to be of utmost importance here.

Hendricks commented on his art, saying: ". . . I want people to respond to my work and be uplifted. Every work is extension of a person's soul . . . every work is a self portrait." Hendricks' paintings are highly personal, yet accessible to audiences, who can judge for themselves what the meaning of a given work may be.

The paintings by Professor Jack Coughlin also prove interesting and thoughtful; they consist of sensual visions of people in balletic positions, overlaid with an abundant supply of symmetrical squares. These works are grateful and abstract, as are those of Professor Hanlyn Davies, which depict symmetry and confusion in black and white collages. Professor Jerry Kearns' work provides a noticeable contrast; it is a collage of six photographs of the earth, moon, and people. This collage is a thought-provoking mix of ideas which seems to exemplify a consciousness about the environment and our relation to the earth as individuals.

Incidentally, individuality plays a major role in this show as well. Coughlin's additional portraits of Emily Dickinson and Ansel Adams, among others, commemorate famous individuals, while Professor Michael Coblyn's "Remember Mandela and Biko" does much of the same. Professor John Townsend's work consists of small sculptures of individuals in various positions, made first from wax which is encased in ceramic shell mold, which is in turn filled with molten bronze. The results of his labors are human figures, each one different and unique. Other sculptures include Professor Frank Ozerko's "The Collector," which is a commentary on an Asian businessman, emphasizing something other than individualism — but its meaning is better left for the viewer.

Certain realistic paintings are also on display. Professor Williams Patterson's oil on canvas work, "The Towel," is a fine still life portrait, hanging next to Patterson's other realistic paintings of a countryside and town. These paintings possess simple yet sophisticated beauty; Patterson's rendering of the country and local buildings are detailed and almost photographically accurate.

Did the show have any main theme? To me, technology and individualism seem to be of primary importance, but those in charge of the show said that any common theme between the paintings was really nonexistent. But they didn't deny me my opinions.

"Everyone can derive their own meaning from it," Gallery Manager Geoffrey Barger said, referring to the work of the artists in general. Barger, who is in charge of the gallery with Tim Schuman, said that the purpose of the show was to bring the UMass art department a little closer to the community as well as the gallery.

The show is definitely worth coming to see. There were just enough pieces of art so that I could remember them all rather clearly, which makes viewing all the more enjoyable.

The show will continue through June 4 at the R. Michelson Gallery in Amherst.

Weil stresses preventive medicine

Andrew Weil, MD and noted author, recently addressed Alby Reiner's Biology of Cancer class at UMass.

By RIC OLIVEIRA
Collegian Correspondent

There were no tickets, there were no collections. But standing in front of a crowd of over 500 students was Andrew Weil. Weil is an M.D. and the author of four books, The Natural Mind, The Marriage of the Sun and Moon, Chocolate to Morphine, and Health and Healing, and has written articles for the New York Times Magazine and Psychology Today. Weil was spoke to the students of Albey Reiner's Biology of Cancer class. Reiner has made it a tradition to bring important views into his class, by people who do not follow so-called "modern medicine." Weil is the perfect example. Educated at Harvard, he received his B.A. in 1964 and his M.D. from Harvard in 1968. Since that time, he has travelled and studied across North and South America, seeking information on medicinal plants, alternative methods of treating disease, and the existence of drug use in other cultures.

Weil spoke on many subjects, stressing the importance of preventative medicine.

"Allopathic medicine, the way it is today, is oriented towards disease, not on how to prevent a disease," Weil explained. "Most regular medicine puts too much emphasis on drugs and not enough on the bodies' natural defenses." Weil's new book, Natural Health, Natural Healing deals with many practices which keep one's health at its naturally functioning best.

Included in the book is a section on "How not to get cancer." Weil feels that the problems of modern medicine have to do with a departure.

"In an earlier part of the century," Weil said, "doctors were more interested in psychological reports. Now, it is the opposite."

Weil gave an example of a woman lawyer who had seen over 20 doctors in 12 years for a urinary dysfunction. One doctor had operated and caused messy side effects. He asked about her lifestyle and discovered that she could be allergic to caffeine. He told her to stop drinking caffeine, and she was cured.

Besides speaking on problems with medicine, Weil spoke on the drug war.

"You will never win a war on drugs," Weil said. "You can only make things you want to get better, worse." When Weil finished speaking the class gave him a warm round of applause, as he had given them all something new to think about.

Caps' playoff problems continue against Bruins

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — Never before have the Washington Capitals been so thoroughly dominated in a playoff series.

Throughout their past Stanley Cup failures, which include seven years without getting past the second round, the Capitals have never lost the first two games of a series. But along with Washington's first-ever Patrick Division playoff title this year came to a matchup with the Boston Bruins, who have taken the Capitals to another plateau of frustration.

Boston plans to put the finishing touches on a four-game sweep of Washington when the Wales Conference finals resume tonight at the Capital Centre.

The Capitals' only goal in the last 142 minutes was on a 5-on-3 power play in Monday's 4-1 loss in Game 3. The Bruins are playing so well, and with such confidence, that it would appear that Washington's only chance is to lift its game three or four notches.

"It's pretty clear what we have to do. We have to play like we've never played before," forward Kelly Miller said. "It's tough to do, but we'll certainly give it a try."

The Bruins, who have won seven of their last eight games, don't expect the Capitals to go down without a fight.

"It's not over," Boston coach Mike Milbury said. "They played hard (Monday). They'll play hard tonight."

Playing hard is one thing. Putting the puck in the net is another. The Capitals have been able to do it only four times in the first three games.

"We had some real good opportunities," Capitals coach Terry Murray said. "But when you work so hard to get some quality opportunities and it doesn't happen to you, it starts to become a situation where you wonder when it's going to happen."

Washington, playing without injured right wing Dino Ciccarelli, has only one even-strength goal in the series. Ciccarelli, the team's leading goal-scorer in the regular season and in the opening round of the playoffs, has been out with a sprained left knee since Game 1 of the Patrick Division finals, but hopes to be ready tonight.

But it might not matter, concidering the way Bruins defense and goalie Andy Moog have been playing.

By stopping 25 of 26 shots on Monday, Moog improved his playoff record to 11-3 and kept his goals-against average below 2.00. Moog, who has started 11 straight games, gives credit to the relentless defensive pressure applied by his teammates, and they return the compliment.

"Andy Moog is a big factor in us shutting them down," left wing Randy Burridge said. "He has come up with big saves at the right time."

Moog contends that the Bruins' dominance is merely a result of playing basic, boring hockey.

"The key to our success right now is keeping things very simple," he said. "The trouble occurs when we try to do too much back there. It's best to make the easy play and stay out of trouble. We are not giving them a turnover or a loose puck."

error on a attempted pickoff of Olivieri.

The score remained 2-0 for three innings due to the gutty effort of freshman John Russell, who struck out five in a row in the second and third innings. The Huskies tied the game in the fourth and won it in the sixth when Lombardi homered off UMass reliever Rob Graziano.

The Minutemen wasted a golden opportunity to blow the game wide open. In the third inning, Mike Tobin led off with a single and stole second, but was picked off by Huskie pitcher Bob Nicklas. Corradi proceeded to single, a hit which surely would have scored Tobin. Corradi too was picked off by Nicklas, and two hits went down the drain.

The Minutemen end the regular season with a record of 25-18. The team leaves Thursday for the Atlantic 10 tournament in Boyertown, Pa. The double-elimination tourney begins Friday with the Minutemen joining Rutgers, West Virginia and George Washington.

to round out my first lax article. My nerves were a wreck and he assured me I'd be fine, he had confidence in me.

I kept thinking, 'If this guy (who doesn't even know me) can put my mind at ease so readily, it must be a joy to play for him.' Obviously, I wasn't off the mark.

He continues to be a joy to work with and is one of the few coaches I have felt completely comfortable interviewing. He is what my mother would refer to as 'a gentle soul."

For me, as well as many others, Coach's 300th win was an emotional one. I feel honored to have worked with such a well-respected and kindred man.

Unfortunately, they broke the mold after Dick Garber. I can only hope this sports writer will encounter coaches like him down the road. I wish him and his family only the best.

So long, sunshine.

teams A-10 chances after the game. "We're going right back at it. We have a good chance if we play the way we can."

Duff batted .336 this year and has a career batting average of .314. She holds the Minutewomen record for career stolen bases at 41 and has been a fine co-captain providing much needed leadership on and off the field. Mary plans on going into Special Ed.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Unexpected news arrives. Take your time reacting to it. A loan will help you protect your credit rating. Do some entertaining at home. Include friends you have not seen for a while.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Do not be discouraged by a recent career or business disappointment. An old friend offers to help; realize that there could be strings attached. Dieting and exercising will bring the desired results.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A short business trip is surprisingly eventful. A friendship should be cultivated. Bounce your ideas off each other. Joining new social groups gives you valuable insights.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Business trips and talks can set you on the path to higher profits. Be alert for shopping bargains. A dressed-up you will dazzle whoever you are with this afternoon or evening.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Curb a tendency to be too frank. Your words could wound others. Heed a hunch or inside tip about money. A quiet setting will boost your productivity at work. Romance needs more nurturing.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Get ready for big changes. Be prepared to explore new places and relationships. Developments at a distance could create good luck. Sharing will strengthen an alliance. Avoid moving too quickly.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Brainstorming with your associates could lead to a wiser financial strategy. Other people will trust you and deliver what you want. Enjoy a quiet evening with mate.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Verbal or written offers spawn other proposals, paving the way to a profitable new relationship. Share information with people who can help you. Carry out the wishes of your group.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Show more spirit and you will win a competition. Face your restlessness head-on. Romantic vibrations are so strong you could almost cut them with a knife. Your affection knows no bounds!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): If you have unfulfilled ambitions, go for it! Seek the advice of experts or return to school. Domestic restrictions can be overcome with improved communication. Some couples set the date.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Certain friends have become your extended family; treat them with respect. Business prospects look better. Find new ways to work off those unwanted pounds. Consult your doctor about dieting.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A career that involves service to others can be fulfilling. Seniors enjoy renewed community involvement. Car pooling can be the answer to a temporary transportation problem. A voice from the past is heard.

Senior shortstop Mary Duff played her final regular season game against Adelphi yesterday at Totman Field.

Softball team drops twinbill vs. Adelphi

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts softball team was swept in a doubleheader by the Adelphi Panthers yesterday by the scores of 6-2, and 3-0.

It was the first time that the Minutewomen had been swept at home in over two years and it came at a particularly bad time as they lost an opportunity for an NCAA bid as well.

"It's frustrating." said caoch Elaine Sortino after the game. "We didn't have it."

Suffice to say that the UMass team that took the field yesterday is but a shadow of the team that it has been able to be earlier in the season. They're hurt and they're tired, but they will be the host of the A-10 Championships this weekend and that will provide the chance to redeem themselves.

UMass has proven that they can play with the best. They've beaten UConn, Rutgers, Michigan and many other good teams and are the reining A-10 Champions and they will not give that title away.

Darlene Claffey had a nice outing yesterday and seems to have regained her touch. She will prove very valuable in the A-10 tourney as Holly Aprile cannot and should not be expected to go it alone.

On the positive side (yes there is one) this is a good team, they just need to forget about the breaks that have not gone their way and create new ones. They swang the bat aggressively yesterday and Adelphi played well.

Baseball splits with Huskies

Minutemen rally to win game two

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

BROOKLINE — The University of Massachusetts baseball team rallied behind the clutch hitting of Glenn DiSarcina and Derek Dana to overcome a 6-3 deficit and defeat Northeastern, 11-7 in game two of yesterday's doubleheader at Friedman Field.

Northeastern managed a split by taking the opener, 5-2.

"We didn't have the intensity I'd like us to have, but we won one," said UMass coach Mike Stone.

In the sixth inning of the nightcap, the Minutemen trailed, 6-5. Dana led off the inning with a double and DiSarcina launched a gap triple to tie the score. Lou Olivieri, who returned to action after missing the game against Amherst with a knee injury, sacrificed DiSarcina home to give the Minutemen a 7-6 lead which they never relinquished.

The game started with Brian Bright clubbing his 10th home run of the year with Steve Corradi (single) on board. The Minutemen added a solo run in the second to up the lead to 3-0.

UMass received encouraging news as Dan O'Leary, who had been sidelined with a nerve injury in his back, returned to the mound. O'Leary started as if he had never been injured. The lefty retired the first seven hitters, but then the Huskies touched O'Leary for six runs in the third on six hits, the most notable a grand slam by Dan Mahoney.

O'Leary exited the game in the third trailing 6-3. Enter one Jeff Toothaker (4-1), who pitched 3 1-3 innings, allowing just three hits and one run before giving way to Rich Graham in the seventh. Graham nailed down the win for Toothaker and the Minutemen.

The Minutemen led 7-6 going into the seventh when they erupted for four runs, capped off by Drew Comeau's fifth dinger of the year.

Game one saw sloppy base running by the Minutemen and one tremendous home run by John Lombardi which gave Northeastern a 5-2 win.

UMass struck first, as Bright doubled and scored on DiSarcina's single. Olivieri moved DiSarcina to third with a single of his own and DiSarcina scored on a throwing Freshman John Russell was the starting pitcher for yesterday's first game against Northeastern. The Minutemen split the doubleheader.

Rodgers fired as Celts coach

By ED GOLDEN
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON — Jimmy Rodgers, whose Boston Celtics were knocked out of the NBA playoffs by the New York Knicks this past weekend, was fired as coach yesterday after just two seasons.

"This has been a very difficult and trying time for all of us," General Manager Jan Volk said in a statement. "We felt that we needed to make a change, and in the interest of all concerned we felt it necessary to do so as quickly as possible.

"Jimmy has been an integral part of our success throughout the '80s, and hopefully this parting will not diminish recognition of his contributions."

The move came two days after the Celtics were ousted from the NBA playoffs by the Knicks, the first time since 1952 the Celtics were eliminated in the first round in successive seasons. The loss marked the first time the Celtics had lost at home to the Knicks in 27 games.

The Celtics were swept by the Detroit Pistons in the first round last season.

Also fired was assistant coach Lanny Van Eman, while assistant and former Celtic player Chris Ford was being retained, spokesman Jeff Twiss said.

Volk said Ford would be given strong consideration as Rodgers' replacement.

"Right now we're going also to take some time to set various options and look at various candidates," Volk said. "We don't have a precise timetable for naming a successor. But Chris Ford will be a very serious candidate."

In two regular seasons under Rodgers, the Celtics were 94-70 along with a record of 2-6 in the playoffs.

After taking a 2-0 lead in their NBA playoff series with the Knicks, the Celtics were ousted on Sunday when New York took a 121-114 victory at Boston Garden.

The Celtics won nine of their final 10 games of the regular season.

In Rodgers' last victory with the Celtics, the team set an NBA playoff record for points and shooting accuracy in a 157-128 win on April 28, when they shot 67 percent from the field.

Rodgers, a 1965 Iowa graduate, was a three-year starter with the Hawkeyes. He started his coaching career at North Dakota, where he served as an assistant to Bill Fitch. He inherited the head coaching job after Fitch's departure in 1967, compiling a 39-33 record over the next three years.

In 1970, Rodgers spent one season at Arkansas as an assistant to Van Eman.

Between 1971-72 and 1977-78, Rodgers served as scout and assistant coach for the Cleveland Cavaliers and was reunited with Fitch, who later went on to become head coach of the Celtics.

The 47-year-old Rodgers, from Franklin Park, Ill., joined the Celtics after Fitch's departure in 1983, assisting K.C. Jones for five years until he was appointed head coach in May 1988.

Memories of a different game

When asked where I'm from, I get bewildered looks when I say Dallas. 'Texas?' is usually the first question. 'What the hell brought you up here?' runs a close second.

So, maybe this wasn't my first choice of universities, but I'm here and I like it. Besides the weather, New England is great.

Adrienne Matt

A sport I was re-introduced to, New England-style, was lacrosse. I attended grammar school in Iowa (yes, where the corn grows) where, in addition to being on a sports team, we were required to participate in P.E. My basketball coach was from Concord and P.E. consisted of learning the games of field hockey, soccer and lacrosse.

Coach taught us men's rules in lacrosse because he was unfamiliar with the women's version. He encorporated lacrosse pivoting skills into our basketball practice. Most parents thought he was a nut, teaching these Midwestern girls East Coast prep school games. But it paid off — we were Division III champs all three years he coached.

My first road trip with the men's lacrosse team at UMass was anxiety-ridden and intimidating. I was sent to Baltimore to cover the end-of-spring-break season opener against Loyola.

Arriving the day before the game and checking into the hotel (my reservations seemed to have disappeared), I felt prepared to competently cover the game. With last name, jersey number, position, year in school, height, weight, hometown and previous season and high school stats swimming in my head, I was directed by some humored players to the assistant coach.

After a carefully-calculated interview with the assistant, I was invited to brunch with the team before we boarded the bus for Loyola. I nervously accepted.

Before the trek, I had spoken briefly to Coach Dick Garber over the phone. He was always willing to talk and was very polite.

As I bounded down the steps to the tables that morning of the game I was greeted with an exuberant, "Good morning, sunshine." Coach Garber had stood up from his table to greet me and invited me to join one of the tables already full of players.

As I meekly smiled good morning, I scanned the tables for a vacant chair and tried to avoid the 70 eyes that were staring at me. At the precise moment I was grunted at by the table, all names, jersey numbers and stats escaped me.

"You must be some fan to travel all the way to Baltimore for a game," a player said.

"I'm not just a fan," I said in a low voice. "I'm the reporter from the Collegian." They looked at one another in disbelief.

"Have you ever been to a lacrosse game before?"

"No, just practice." They grunted and groaned.

"Figures you're from the Collegian."

How could I begin to tell these nameless faces I had played lacrosse, Concord-style, in Iowa? I didn't even attempt it. I ate little and racked my brains for all those dang stats I had committed to memory during the train ride the day before.

As conversation rolled along, they slowly returned to memory as I was able to recall high school records and hometowns with amazing alacrity. I doubt I fully redeemed myself but I boarded the bus not feeling as dimunitive as I did at the beginning of brunch.

Coach Garber continued to be kind. He gave me stats and quotable quotes

GEO recinds threat to withhold grades

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Employee Organization yesterday decided to hold off asking teaching assistants to withhold the final grades of undergraduates in an attempt to force the administration to approve a fall union election for graduate student employees.

The GEO has also withdrawn its opposition to three sticking points — administrative support before the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission, a neutrality pledge of all administrators, a no-strike pledge of the GEO — which the two groups have been unable to resolve in over two weeks of negotiations.

Renee Heberle, GEO spokeswoman, said the GEO changed tactics in its relations with University of Massachusetts administrators because of repeated complaints from the administration that it could not negotiate with perpetual threats hanging over negotiations.

"This is a public challenge to the administration," she said. "They say they can't negotiate under a threat. Well, the threat is now removed."

Reading from a press statement at its Fearing Street office, Heberle said the GEO is making these major concessions, "In order to give the administration the opportunity to demonstrate to graduate students that they can negotiate in good faith without the threat of a job action in the air."

Madson, Minnesota finalist

UM administrator to be interviewed for vice presidency

Vice Chancellor Dennis Madson

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson is one of three finalists for the position of vice president for student affairs at the University of Minnesota.

Citing recent state fiscal problems as a major factor in considering the job, Madson said yesterday he feels complemented by his selection and plans to travel to Minnesota for interviews on May 22-23.

"I've put 12 years of my life into this place, we've done and are doing some good quality things here at the University," he said, "but these gains have been nickeled away because of the loss of money and questionable public support from legislators."

Madson, who said he was approached by the Minnesota search committee in September, said he will leave if a good offer is made. He added, "If I were a betting man, I would bet that I would be back here at UMass in the fall. The hard thing is that I don't want people to write me off."

Carol Pazandak, chair of the Minnesota search committee, said "after scrutinizing him up and down" Madson was nominated by several people because he is "really nifty."

"The committee thought he was very qualified, with the skills and qualities we are looking for," she said.

Pazandak said Nils Hasselmo, president of University of Minnesota, hopes to announce the new vice president at the June 8 meeting of the Minnesota Board of Regents.

Saying the position is "dreadfully important," Pazandak said Madson's experience at UMass would help Minnesota diversify its campus and student body.

Compared to UMass, Madson said Minnesota is very well-funded and is rated as one of the top five public universities in the country. "[The fiscal crisis] has been pretty hard on everybody," he said.

Pat Kaszuba, Minnesota spokeswoman, said 73 peo-

Nader blasts corporations, urges student activism

By JULIA SEREBRINSKY
Collegian Staff

Ralph Nader, recognized as a "father of consumer rights in America," blasted corporations and the U.S. government last night for fostering "a market shaped by Pavlovian methods" and urged the mobilization of student civic activism in combating "corporate crimes."

Lecturing on the theme of "growing up corporate," Nader asserted that the free enterprise system is "a corporate socialist system" which by way of bureaucracy and mass media conditions the public to accept the status quo.

Nader called this phenomenona a "huge corporate criminal act" which perpetuates the growth of "Millertime" consumers and politicians.

Speaking to more than 150 people in Bowker Auditorium, Nader chided tobacco, automotive and oil industries for causing damage to consumers and the environment.

He said the oil companies contribute to pollution and that the automotive industry does not provide sufficient safety for consumers. He charged the tobacco companies with being the "biggest drug dealers in the world."

Nader added that television, advertisers and the Federal Communication Commission cheat the public by not paying it for the use of public airways.

He stressed that television and advertisers play a major role in the way children are being raised. "Children are increasingly being brought up by corporations and decreasingly by parents," Nader said.

"Co-optive cooperation is displaying itself in the disintegration of this society" partially by the mass media which creates lowered standards and shapes the way people are judged throughout their lives, he said.

He blamed universities for preserving this status-quo by not giving students opportunity to become civically active. "What we are seeing is corporatization of universities. The universities are desperately afraid of exposing you to civic activities."

Citing the University of Massachusetts, Nader said that the universities do not offer any civic courses in the curriculum. He added that the shape of the curriculum "reflects the power structure of the University."

Nader ended his speech by calling on students to mobilize in becoming "critical masses."

"It doesn't matter who our leaders are a long as we know who we are. This generation needs a whole new learning for social program and survival to grapple with problems of 20th century," he said. "Extracurricular activity . . . that's where you're learning the knowledge of survival."

He urged students to gather their talent and conscience, set up an interview with company they didn't want to work for and "give it the rap."

Activists guilty of trespassing

Five defendents fined, sentenced to year probation

By MICHELLE LOCKE
Associated Press Writer

NORTHAMPTON — Five peace activists charged in a sit-in at President/Chancellor Duffey's office last spring were found guilty of trespassing yesterday despite their arguments that they felt compelled to act against Department of Defense-funded research.

"To me this case is all about us being sent as human beings to say no to a way that we know is not working in this world, which is researching war, preparing for war. We can do better," 31-year-old defendant Rosemary Heidkamp said in an impassioned closing argument.

The jury in Northampton District Court deliberated for about 20 minutes before reaching a decision.

The five defendants, who range in age from 31 to 78, were sentenced to one year probation on the condition that they pay $140 each in fines and fees.

They face a second trespassing charge in connection with another visit to the University and that trial was scheduled for October.

The defendants had hoped to present a necessity defense, an argument that their actions prevented a greater harm. They also had hoped to make a case based on international law.

But District Judge Philip Contant ruled out all but a defense based on their First Amendment right to express their views.

"We were there to uphold the law. We had a legal right to be there," said Kenton Sharp, 41, an Amherst Town Meeting member. Sharp said in his closing argument that it was unfortunate the defendants had been

Student activates mine in dorm room

A University of Massachusetts student caused minor property damage to a fourth floor dorm room in Thoreau Residence Hall Tuesday when he accidentally activated a "pressure sensitive" practice mine he thought was dormant, authorities said.

According to David Beaudin, assistant fire prevention officer at Environmental Health and Safety, the mine is like "a simulator hand grenade or bullet that the government produces for training. It's a device used in training."

The explosion from the mine caused damage to a footlocker and burned a rug. The Amherst Fire Department and Environmental Health and Safety responded to the scene. No injuries were reported.

In the 12 years that Beaudin has worked at the University, he said he has never seen a mine in a dorm room, but practice bullets occasionally appear. "Somehow these things get diverted from military use to the residence halls." The mine probably could not kill a per-

Community discusses homophobic harrassment

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

Officials from the Student Activities Office, Human Relations and Public Safety met with more than 20 members of the University of Massachusetts Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Faculty and Staff Support Group yesterday to address the concerns surrounding a new rise in homophobic harassment directed at faculty and staff.

According to Linda Marchesani, director of the Residential Academic Program, in addition to the incident of homophobic harassment in Arthur Keene's classroom two weeks ago, there have been two additional reported incidents.

A live-in-professor found homophobic graffiti scrawled on her door, Marchesani said. She also said a staff person returned to her car last week to find it covered with eggs and other food with a poster advertising Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Awareness Week.

In addition to these incidents, she said she has spoken with and overheard conversations by homophobic students.

"The rage these young men expressed was terrifying to me," she said. Dennis Madson, vice chancellor for Student Affairs said the administration at UMass has been playing an active role to increase education about homophobia.

"We're not trying to limit opinions, we're trying to make the University a safe, diverse place," he said. "But we're also concerned that this kind of tension has gone to the classroom."

Rene Carew, director of Student Activities said that her office has been working closely with student groups like the Young Americans for Freedom in an effort to open dialogue and build trust.

"The challenge is to appear non-judgemental to these groups so we can question and get deeper into the premise of their programs," she said.

There is a great need for concern, she said there is often a back lash when there is a threat to the status quo. Since the organizational level of the "White supremacists" on campus is moderately low, she said the problem has been much lower than it potentially could be.

Jack Luippold, from the Office of Public Safety, said campus police have difficulties in protecting students from harassment that is not illegal because police guidelines differ from University guidelines.

"We have to ask ourselves, 'Are we police officers or administrators?' It becomes a real problem," he said.

Felice Yeskel, director of the Program for Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Concerns, said the fall-out for gay students from these incidents are "traumatic." She said both students and staff have voiced a concern for their safety because of recent displays of homophobia.

"I've had students call me in the middle of the night because they are afraid to sleep in their dorm, my staff is afraid to work in Southwest, something needs to be done," Yeskel said.

DEAD END — A Leverett cemetary absorbs a lonely and desolate sunny afternoon.

Kerry to speak at commencement

Massachusetts Senator John Kerry will be the main speaker at the 120th Commencement of the University of Massachusetts Sunday, May 27, at 10:30 a.m. in Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

President/Chancellor Duffey will confer bachelor's degrees on approximately 4,700 candidates. Six honorary degrees will also be presented.

Receiving honorary Doctor of Laws degrees will be Thomas R. Donahue, national AFL-CIO secretary-treasurer; University lacrosse Coach Richard F. Garber; former University President David C. Knapp; Library of Congress General Counsel John J. Kominski; and Georgia Congressman John Lewis. An honorary Doctor of Fine Arts degree will be awarded to singer and songwriter Buffy Sainte-Marie.

Two undergraduate Commencement speakers have been chosen this year: Thomas V. Ciampi of Secaucus, N.J., a Bachelors Degree with Individual Concentration (BDIC) student who will receive a Bachelor of Arts degree; and Michelle Ann Toth of Weymouth, a marketing major who will receive a Bachelor of Business Administration degree.

Senator Kerry, elected to the U.S. Senate in 1984, serves on a number of committees and subcommittees. His work on environmental issues has included Boston Harbor clean-up funding aid, opposition to offshore oil drilling and action in the battle against acid rain.

Earlier this spring he headed an international panel of environmentalists who met in Washington to draft a ban on mineral exploration in Antarctica and vote sweeping resolutions on oil spills, acid rain and other environmental threats to that continent. In the Senate and in the Commonwealth, he has become a special advocate for those with handicaps and for job and medical benefits to veterans.

Now 46, Kerry graduated from Yale University in 1966 and won three Purple Hearts and a Silver Star in Vietnam. He graduated from Boston College Law School in 1976 and won a 1982 election as lieutenant governor in 1982. Kerry has two daughters and lives in Boston.

The Graduate School will hold a separate commencement Saturday, May 26, at 10:30 a.m. in Curry Hicks Cage for 300 doctoral and 900 master's degree candidates. The commencement address will be given by Prof. Vladimir Haensel of the chemical engineering department, a member of the National Academy of Science.

An honorary Doctor of Laws degree will be awarded to the Brazilian educator Paulo Freire and an honorary Doctor of Science degree will go to Boston computer scientist Richard M. Karp. A special posthumous award of the Chancellor's Medal will be made to the late Anne McHugh of Holyoke, former member of the Board of Regents of Higher Education.

ple applied for the position.

President/Chancellor Duffey said Madson has done an excellent job here at UMass and hopes he decides to stay.

He added: "I can understand why the University of Minnesota or any other great university would be interested in Dennis Madson. He has a superb reputation and has had a great deal of experience. But he would be a great loss to UMass."

Provost O'Brien also urged Madson to stay at UMass but said he understands why Madson would be tempted to leave. "With the uncertainties of state funding it is not surprising that any vice chancellor at this University shows an interest in any position outside of the state," he said.

If Madson is selected and decides to take the Minnesota position, he will be the second vice chancellor to leave the University this year. Deirdre Ling, vice chancellor for University Relations and Development, is leaving UMass this month to head the Middlesex School in Concord.

SGA approves $2M fiscal year budget

By RUSSELL SKELTON
Collegian Staff

The $2 million fiscal year 1991 Student Government Association budget was passed last night by the Undergraduate Student Senate with a vote of 36-3, 6 abstentions.

Several proposals to amend the budget were made before final passage, but the Senate passed only one of the amendments.

The Senate approved a change in funding for the New World Theatre from $5,000 to last year's level of $7,660.

Emphasizing the diverse make-up of the group, a New World Theatre representative, Yvonne Mendez asked for support of the amendment.

She said, "The organization has 62 members of many different races and cultures. Given the racial difficulty at UMass, this is a very important group."

SGA Treasurer Karen Talbot and Senator Richard Sugarman spoke in favor of the lower funding level. Both acknowledged the superb quality of New World Theatre productions but said $5,000 was inappropriate because the group was not truly student initiated. Other amendments failing to pass were a proposal to cut the funding for computers at the Student Activities Office by $7,500 and a proposal mandating all students getting paid out of SGA funds be on the work-study program.

In other business, Student Trustee-elect Angus McQuilken reported he and SGA President Natasha Diephuis were working on the issue of date rape on campus.

McQuilken said the administration has a policy of withholding information on this type of offense, but he and Diephuis are working to have the information publicized.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

A lesson for Duffey

Some students and others have attempted to divide this community by making charges comparing the state of Israel and the government of South Africa. Such comparisons are improper, offensive and inaccurate. The tragic divisions in the Middle East must be seen in their own context. President/Chancellor Duffey; press release (4/30) im-prop-er adj 1. Not fit or suitable (Webster's Dictionary): It would appear that Joseph Duffey has appointed himself Director of Thought Control for UMass.

Pratip Dastidar

Mr. Duffey would have us believe that comparison between two repressive state systems, both created by settler colonists, both displacing traditional non-European societies, both (need I go on?) is improper.

Sorry, Joseph. An academic institution will encourage any form of intellectual comparison, any form of debate, provided that it is conducted in a spirit of inquiry. It is not your role to declare what discourse is proper on this campus. Libel laws, and a student code of conduct, exist to safeguard decent procedure.

of-fen-sive adj 3. Obnoxious 4. Insulting: The constituency that felt that this intellectual and moral inquiry was offensive are adamant Zionists, who dread permitting the world to hear about the offensive discriminatory laws instituted by Israel against its Arab populace.

Yes, something is offensive — Duffey's press release. To whom? How about every Palestinian and most Arabs here?

How about many citizens of Third World nations? My government in India and most Third World nations voted in United Nations General Assembly in favor of a resolution that emphatically equated Zionism with racism. These same "offensive" governments also feel Apartheid is racist.

We carry Third World passports. Therefore, we have every right to study why our governments feel Zionism is a form of racism.

Really offended? Need I mention the brave men, women and children of the Intifadah, who live racist discrimination everyday? Carrying ID cards, under curfew, homes bulldozed; sprayed with rubber bullets, tear gas canisters and live ammunition. They don't need to hear these academic arguments. They live the reality along with their Third World brothers and sisters in Soweto and Crossroads. Gaza is not Amherst, Mr. Duffey.

ac-cu-rate adj 1. Free from error, exact, precise: A state that legally enacts laws that are racist is liable to be described as an Apartheid state. How about some Israeli samples: 1) The Law of Return that permits any person born to a Jewish mother to return to Israel and acquire citizenship, but denies the same right to native-born Palestinians living in the squalor of refugee camps, and damned to exile.

2) The Population Registration Law which divides Israeli citizens into Jewish and Arab nationalities. There is no Israeli nationality.The purpose: discrimination.

3) The Status Law that details privileges and positions that can only be claimed by Jews. So much for Arab equality.

Mr. Duffey should be well aware that he is obliged to conduct himself in accordance with the spirit of academia. The Chancellor's Office is certainly not the forum to air uninformed opinions. They must produce a detailed factual report rebutting these comparisons before making sweeping, emotional statements.

If anything is inaccurate, it is Duffey's grasp of Middle Eastern politics, culture and history. He is a highly-paid official, who must display greater restraint and professionalism in his press releases. We wouldn't bother to appeal on moral grounds. Remember New Africa House? Or the Southwest riots?

Yes, the tragic divisions in the Middle East must be seen in their own context. Not Duffey's. The president/chancellor would be well advised to return to his true mission — promoting UMass.

Anti-GEO campaign has begun

GEO District 65/UAW has been concerned about the possibility of an old-fashioned union-busting campaign since the University administration first dug in its heels on the issue of neutrality.

Vincent Stankiewicz

Typically, a savvy management won't dirty its own hands with the kinds of vicious statements that are at the core of such a campaign, but will delegate such work to underlings.

We have anticipated the possibility of a bad-mouthing campaign over the summer, but the anti-GEO campaign may be beginning even earlier than we expected.

GEO District 65/UAW was recently compared to the late, brutal Romanian regime for simply asking the University administration (which is a creature of the state, the graduate employees' ultimate employer), to agree to abide by the same policy of neutrality that the state of Massachusetts has always undertaken in union elections where the state is the employer.

One very grave concern that unions have when they conduct organizing drives in a hostile climate is the ability of management (here, the administration, department chairpeople and heads, and faculty advisors), in assertion of a 'right to free speech,' to exploit a situational advantage to crush a union before employees have had a chance to make an independent assessment.

It is not uncommon in the private sector, for example, for managements to conduct what are called 'captive audience meetings,' during which they spew anti-union propaganda to employee audiences who have no choice but to sit through the meeting.

In such a setting, the employee's ability to respond in exercise of the same 'free speech' can be little more than a polite fiction: an employee who responds in the union's defense risks firing or other disciplinary action.

Even when this is done in a blatant manner, as it often is, the onus is on the employee to pursue the feeble legal means available for rectification, and if the employee eventually gets his or her job back, it is likely to take years.

In the meantime, the other employees will have received the message about just how unfree speech really can be.

It is a principle long established in American law that no right is absolute. We are all familiar with the commonplace dictum, for example, that free speech protection does not extend to shouting 'fire!' in a crowded theater. GEO does not wish to impinge on anyone's rights.

We simply do not want the University to take unfair advantage of its position to intimidate graduate employees through the persuasive power that a chairperson or faculty advisor has over employees who are also students.

Objective reporting impossible in covering Arab-Israeli issue

Once again, in the Colleigan I see clear proof that objective reporting is, in fact, impossible — and it is of no use whatsoever pretending otherwise.

If Friday's front page story ("Israel celebrates, others protest," May 4) did not intend the painting of those concerned over the treatment of Palestinians in occupied territories as "hate groups," then Chancellor Duffey's statement that these same students are promoting "racial antagonism" isn't racist.

The chancellor's statement was racist, and this article (a thinly-disguised propaganda piece) is an obvious effort to portray those organizations concerned about the treatment of Palestinians as fascist outfits on the level of the Ku Klux Klan.

This is inexcusable.

The writer most likely did not intend to smear those students concerned about what our University funds via different investments.

Unfortunately, "balanced reporting" almost always obscures the real story, mainly because vain attempts at objectivity serve only the controlling interests who define "objectivity."

Contrary to the ridiculous views of the chancellor, "racial antagonism" on this campus is currently being perpetrated by racists.

And racism is, quite obviously, the systematic oppression of people of color by Whites.

It is absurd to take concern over the University's having become a tool of repression— that "states" serving ruling class interests should be dismantled and replaced with states that are blatantly promoting proletarian interests, and label these as acts of hatred.

I'm appalled.

Protect Jews of Soviet Union

And the people ask, "Why now?"

Why? Why now, why ever? What are the ingredients of a global pogrom? How does the world become so swollen, so ripe, so festering with hatred? With ignorance. With blood.

Lynn Weissman

Is it because of glasnost? The Soviet Union, struggling with its new-found identity crisis, seeks to be redeemed. Teeming with anger, finally able to sound opinions, to protest, to be heard, the fascist groups within the Soviet majority look to the convenient minority, finding the ever-present scapegoat (does not the word "Jew" inevitably coincide?).

Historically, anti-Semitism has been exacerbated by the falling economy of the USSR, and now perestroika has petrified the ruble, depleted the ration. But is this enough to incite the vehemence of so many against so few?

This is not mere paranoia on the part of the Jews. May 5, 1990 marked the date of a pogrom organized by Pamyat. Such a massacre (by no means an isolated incident) is not only a scheduled act of hatred and violence, but was also a well-publicized media event.

Meanwhile, the United States, the "superpower" that it boasts itself to be, slumbers by the wayside, as it did some 50 years ago when 6 million Jews (not to mention 6 million others) were being gassed, charred, mutilated, beaten, tortured, raped, enslaved, experimented upon, demoralized and dehumanized in Eastern Europe.

Pamyat is not the only group which seeks to defile the Jewish population of Soviet Russia. Even more frightening than such blatant vilification is the lack of opposition from Mr. Gorbachev and his government. Such apathy and passivity not only condones but perpetuates and facilitates the debasement of a people.

German reunification? West Germany is fearful. Europe is fearful. And except for the Nazis and the neo-Nazis, the world is fearful. At first, many of us asked naively, myopically, apathetically, "Why is it our business?" — still in a state of denial of the horrific facts of the Holocaust.

But we are all accountable for the future of a reunified Germany, a responsibility which weighs heavily and uncomfortably on our embittered souls.

Israel? Does the misguided perception of Israel as an Apartheid state lend viability to organized massacre of the Jewish people worldwide? The old chicken and egg question, which came first: loathing of the Jew or animosity towards a Jewish state? While it may be true that the former often (but not always) does precedes the latter, it becomes a dialectical question, as the anti-Zionist often metamorphoses into a full-fledged anti-Semite.

I am deeply grieved by the surge of terrorist actions perpetrated by anti-Semitic, neo-fascist groups in the Soviet Union. I regret that there was little hope and little action taken to denounce the pogrom of May 5.

There seems little hope for the future, unless Mr. Gorbachev and other Soviet authorities are urged by the U.S. government to protect the Jews of the Soviet Union. This form of political pressure from the United States explicitly entails:

1)A direct appeal from the President of the United States to curb such violent, anti-Semitic activity by monitoring and restricting the activities of hate groups;

2)Calling upon the Soviet government to expedite emigration of Jews who wish to leave by permitting the establishment of a direct air link to Israel.

If we do not voice these demands now and make ourselves heard, by writing letters to our senators, state representatives and the President of the United States and the Secretary of State, we will find ourselves to be fresh victims of our own sordid past — history condemning itself to repetition for our ignorance.

University curriculum needs multi-cultural education

Multi-culturalism is our school's latest "ism." It invades the classroom, the libraries and Student Union, and threatens to take over Whitmore. What is it?

Multi-culturalism is the understanding or perception that all cultures (ethnic, religious, racial, sexual, even regional) are beautiful and important, and should be studied as such. That means that campus activities, academic or otherwise, should assist in bringing to students a multi-cultural perspective.

Its influence is limited, of course, by the many freedoms enjoyed by faculty, staff and students in speech, association and personal thought. It should be understood as both a tendency and a desired outcome on the part of the University.

The University's success in multi-cultural efforts is by no means certain. Despite the popular campus view that the administration can rule by fiat rather than persuasion, it is the availability of resources and the openness of faculty to new course options that will determine success. At present, resources for the creation of new courses are scarce and the invasion of multi-culturalism (and similar doctrines) have raised a storm at colleges nationwide.

The problem with multi-culturalism for many faculty is in its effect upon the traditional core areas of knowledge. How do we treat the sexist or culturally ignorant works of great European men? The resulting core education would leave undergraduates either ignorant of or hostile to western knowledge and values.

Most proponents of multi-culturalism wish to see the history and intellectual treasures of understudied groups promoted at the University. This includes a review of American history to include more of the contributions of women, Asian Americans, Blacks and American Indians (among others). They also demand the aggressive recruitment of "minority" faculty and programs that bring new cultural activities to campus.

Eric Nakajima

The creation of new courses, recruitment of new faculty and the adjustment of core courses to reflect cultural diversity require money, time and choices.

The argument over multi-culturalism has become, ironically, one of exclusion. Much of that complaint is misplaced. Some multi-culturalists are unnecessarily hostile to the traditional canon of literature. The goal of multi-culturalism is to allow for an understanding of cultures in equivalence, which requires not just a base of cultural anecdotes, but a process that allows students to mediate an understanding of different philosophies.

Academics who are against multi-culturalism seem to think that the core of Western knowledge will be undervalued or denigrated, while multi-culturalists assume that the simple presentation of facts will beget their appreciation. Both fail to explain why this would happen.

The argument isn't over what ideas are to be presented, but over what interpretative structure will be used to present the information. The assumption is that the intellectual cohabitation of cultures will breed either contempt for tradition or love for the new. The question is how to create a neutral space in which to learn about cultures without imposing unintended judgments.

The University should set as a goal the presentation of under-learned areas of the arts, humanities and the social sciences. We could study different theories of how we transmit and receive knowledge of cultures.

Multi-culturalism is a stated goal in the University's mission, and implicit in its policies against intolerance or racism. We should be as creative and far-reaching in attaining campus goals. The implications of multi-culturalism should be debated publicly.

Pro-life rally deserved coverage

I am writing this in regard to the Collegian's lack of coverage of the record-breaking attendance at the pro-life rally in Washington D.C. on Saturday, April 28, 1990.

As pro-choice as this newspaper seems to be (with its coverage of pro-choice events, advertisements, etc.), I expected to see at least a small story on some middle page of the April 30 edition about the pro-life rally in Washington over the weekend, but not a word was said.

Then Wednesday morning I see coverage of the pro-choice rally on the front page?! This supposedly newsworthy rally consisted of merely 1,700 people — that's less than one percent of the size of the pro-life rally in Washington, at which attendance was estimated by the Parks Service to be 569,000!

I am not at all against the coverage of the two above-mentioned rallies, but how on earth can Collegian editors consider themselves responsible journalists when they let a rally of this magnitude (the largest rally EVER for any cause in our nation's history) and of pertinence to this campus just slip through their fingers? Or was it omitted by "choice?"

I demand news coverage of things that affect us most.

Fraternities should be disbanded

I am a resident in a neighborhood infested with UMass fraternities. How can I begin, except to say that these particular houses are less the dwellings of decent young men devoted to good will, hard work and brotherhood, along with academics, as much as they are dens of vulgarity and obscenity, logically inhabited by trash.

Perhaps the "Party Line" of their Greek Organization articulates such proud and noble virtues as goodwill and brotherhood, but on any given day or night — echoing with thunderous appeal throughout our small, condensed neighborhood, the decent residents are subjected to wild and indecent expressions of misogyny, racism and anti-Semitism infused with their very public unruliness.

It is clear these fraternity people come from certain types of families given the way they behave, speak and what they evidently value in life. They conduct themselves like Jimmy-the-Greek if he were a used-car salesman.

I do not rule out the possibility that a response to this letter from the Greek Organization or just some fraternities may crop up. It really does not matter.

The facts remain: they are loud, obnoxious and idiotic, both day and night, whenever the occasion strikes them. Perhaps they are this way by nature. If so, fraternities should be disbanded.

If fraternities really do not want such a truly ugly and repulsive image, perhaps they should pick people of fine moral fibre, standards of excellence and gentlemanly virtues.

There must be a few young men of this quality at UMass. They cannot all be at Princeton.

Of course, some of the other student houses, as well as sororities, are hardly exempt from the thrust of this letter. Many of them are no better.

However, not only are the fraternities the loudest of all, but they are also supposed to set a good example. Instead, they and their kind set a bad example: they are poor and undesirable neighbors who make this (and probably any) neighborhood a worse place. They are resented.

It is hoped that the days of this Greek Organization at UMass are numbered.

True diversity of conformity

The year was 1950 and a "reign of terror" was just starting, thanks to a senator from Wisconsin. His name was Joe McCarthy.

He created the "Red Scare," in which he forced people into silence. If they spoke against him, he called them "communist."

This reign of terror existed until he took on a group that was too big for even him to scare, the U.S. Army.

When I first entered this University in the fall, I was told how this school prided itself on diversity. Diversity of cultures, economic classes, political views, etc.

I thought diversity was "the state or quality of being diverse; unlikeness; difference; also, an instance of this" (Standard College Dictionary).

Well, after being here for almost two full semesters, I have come to realize what diversity means on this campus.

The definition has changed from the above — to whatever you don't like or agree with, we will force it down your throat. If you regurgitate it, then you are branded a racist, a sexist, a homophobe or a fascist.

How diverse is a campus that tries to force students to conform to "diverse and enlightened" views? Why is it that students on this campus preach diversity and try to enforce conformity to their views?

If someone has beliefs, they have the right to express them.

Is someone a racist because they don't praise or support Affirmative Action? Is someone a homophobe if they have a fundamental problem with homosexuality? Is someone a sexist if they don't use gender neutral phrases? Is someone a fascist if they dare to express their own views?

In the name of diversity, I would say no. Unfortunately, on this campus, the answer too often seems to be yes.

If this University, and more importantly its students, want to truly practice and allow diversity, it must stop using these McCarthy-type scare tactics.

I think it's about time someone finally stood up to these so-called diverse students on this campus and to tell them that we will not hide our views because of fear and scare tactics.

I think Voltaire said it best. "I disapprove of what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it."

The history behind 'neutrality'

Just a few comments on administrative "neutrality" during a union election for graduate employees.

I have witnessed several union campaigns at universities where the administration did not remain neutral. The result was anything but the preservation of free speech. What happened?

Department chairs forced employees to attend "captive audience" meetings where pro-union sentiments could not be expressed.

Representatives of the Office of Personnel personally visited most employees in their offices or labs, made them interrupt what they were doing, and subjected them to anti-union tirades.

Faculty, conscious of their power as supervisors and writers of recommendations, threatened employees (illegally) with loss of benefits and possible loss of jobs if the union were voted in.

Management spent hundreds of thousands of dollars on consultants who interviewed faculty about each of their employees, drawing up individual profiles of every voter so that specific anti-union messages could be tailored to each.

In each instance, this was not a free exchange among interested parties. Rather, it was one person exercising power over another.

These may sound like excesses. Yet they have happened at numerous other universities and should not be allowed at UMass.

I believe free speech and democracy are best served where the voters can debate among themselves the merits of unionization. This is what happened in the union election held among UMass professionals last fall.

I don't understand why the University shouldn't stand by its previous policy of non-interference.

Condos rob Walden of significance

Walden Pond, once a place of serene beauty, is on the verge of being desecrated by mixed-income condominiums.

The pond and the 3,000 acres of Walden Woods was made legendary by Henry David Thoreau's literary work, "Walden." This literary work became a symbol for the need to escape man's desperate enterprises and to create a quiet place to commune with nature.

Why destroy the heart of the matter? Why mar the mystical woods and the sparkling pond with condos? Are we incapable of preserving anything?

This should force us all to think, really think, of the open spaces that are being destroyed on all sides. What kind of world will we leave for the next generation? Will they never be able to look upon an open field or a vast horizon without seeing a bulldozer or skyscraper?

It seems that every year we commit ourselves to so-called progress and never stop to think of the consequences.

In "Walden," Thoreau naturalized religion and, at the same time, wrote about man's alienation from the natural environment. He wrote about God's gift, nature: The sun, the moon, grass, forest, and Walden Pond. The greatest sin is not recognizing God's gift, Nature.

With Earth Day still in our shadows, we should all be more aware than ever of what is happening around us. Raping the world of Walden Pond and its beauty could be the greatest slap in the face of individualism and freedom, and anyone who believes in these principles should now wake up and take action to stop the building of the condominiums.

Overpopulation within our own boundaries

They say that we are exploding, that we are spilling out all over the place. In the modern age, brown, yellow and black are breeding like rabbits.

We are endlessly fecund and are powerless in our animal desire to continuously multiply.

Overpopulation is the reason why so many of us are sinking deeper and deeper into the abysmal hole of poverty.

It is the source of all our problems.

Overpopulation has not been a problem for the Europeans. Why has this been the case?

Is there a collective realization among them that unending breeding means more people for a smaller share of the pie? That they are simply too rational to overpopulate, far too sophisticated to indulge in sex without protection? This may be the case.

However, let us look at the question of overpopulation and the Europeans from another angle. Undoubtedly, many countries of the Third World are bulging at the seams with people.

The point to consider is that we are and have been doing it within our own boundaries.

There have been no immense transfers of populations, no enslavements and no genocides of the indigenous peoples displaced.

There have been no Americas, no South Africas and no Australias, among others, created. So, to say that Europeans did not overpopulate is a falsehood.

Much of the population in Europe simply occupied other people's lands.

It was a luxury the rest of us did without.

GEO holds off threats

Heberle said the GEO demands have not changed just the message the group wants to send the administration.

"All year long we have negotiated under a threat," she said. "Now we are telling them to reach our demands without the threat of a job action."

Heberle said that the GEO demands a fall election and a curriculum fee waiver that is not financial aid. This semester graduate students had to apply for financial aid to cover the costs of the curriculum fee.

The GEO also wants job security for the fall semester as well as advanced notice if a job will not be offered in the fall.

"With such big moves on our part and changes in our demands, the administration can't help but effectively and quickly come to an agreement with us," she said.

Heberle said she expects an agreement within a week.

The GEO's proposal withdrew its demand for a neutrality pledge of administrators and 'supervisory faculty and staff.' The administration had refused to agree to the pledge which would have prevented them from advocating for or against a union.

Heberle said the membership's main concern is not an anti-union campaign from the administration, but an anti-union campaign from department heads and deans during meetings and other verbal contact.

"We don't want to prevent faculty members from expressing their opinions. We are afraid of department meetings where [GEO members] are before their peers and their faculty members who determine their whole lives," she said. "We are afraid of the intimidation that could result."

She said should an agreement with the administration be reached the group would still have to go before the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission, which runs union elections and certifies unions.

unable to use those arguments.

But Hampshire County Assistant District Attorney Frederic Bartmon, who congratulated the defendants on their dignified bearing, indicated he felt they had communicated on their reasons for protesting.

"That kind of conviction can't be kept down, and probably shouldn't be kept down," he said.

However, Bartmon urged the jury not to try to resolve the rights or wrongs of the research being conducted at the University of Massachusetts.

"This is not the forum in which that debate could or should take place," he said. The references to international laws or treaties also had no bearing on the case, the prosecutor said.

The five face trespassing charges in connection with the occupation of Duffey's office during a string of building take-overs and protests last spring protesting Defense Department-funded research.

The defendants said they refused to leave the office after the building closed at 5 p.m. because they were concerned about University research on the anthrax virus.

Bartmon pointed out that Duffey had met with the group, but then had to leave for a dental appointment. He said the defendants could have attended the University-sponsored forums on the research instead of choosing to stay in the office.

The University maintained the non-classified research financed by the Defense Department is aimed at finding an improved vaccine against the cattle disease, which can also affect humans.

But defendant Meryl B. Nass, a 38-year-old Amherst physician, contended that the research could be misused and could potentially be used offensively in germ warfare.

Also facing trial were 78-year-old peace activist Margaret Holt and Mary Schatzkamer, 72, both of Amherst. A sixth defendant, 50-year-old Harriet Nestle of Leverett, was also scheduled to be tried but missed the first day of jury selection because she was serving a jail sentence in Connecticut in connection with a protest against nuclear weapons in Groton, Conn.

Contant ruled that Nestle will be tried at a later date.

The Politics of Bilingual Education.

"In a style accessible to the lay reader, Rosalie Porter dispels many of the myths and misconceptions that infest bilingual education today. She exposes the political and ideological interests of many proponents of the status quo. Yet she accomplishes all this with the sensitivity and insight of one who has experienced, at firsthand, the struggle to educate limited-English-speaking students, originally as such a student herself."
— CHESTER E. FINN, JR., Professor of Education and Public Policy, Vanderbilt University, Director of the Educational Excellence Network

"Drawing upon 15 years of experience as a bilingual educator, Rosalie Porter lays out a sane middle ground between uncritical defenders of bilingual education and ethnocentric advocates of English as an official language."
— HOWARD GARDNER, Professor of Education, Harvard University.

"A valuable contribution to the debate on bilingual education."
— CAROL PENDAS WHITTEN, former Director, Office of Bilingual Education and Minority Language Affairs, U.S. Department of Education

"This book shows how an entrenched bureaucracy concerned with its own self-preservation lost track of its mission to teach children who do not speak English ... A fine view from the trenches."

IMPORTANT
RESIDENCE HALL INFORMATION

It is important for all residents planning to live on-campus for the Fall 1990 semester to remember the following important policies and procedures. Please read this information carefully and be sure you understand and are aware of each of the following obligations.

1. RESIDENCE HALL CONTRACT CARDS ARE DUE THURSDAY, MAY 24.

As always if you intend to live in the residence halls in the fall, you must return your Residence Hall Contract Card to the Housing Assignment Office before you leave campus for the summer. When you return your Contract Card you will be given a date stamped receipt. IF YOU FAIL TO RETURN YOUR RESIDENCE HALL CONTRACT CARD BY MAY 24, 1990 YOUR FALL ASSIGNMENT WILL BE SUBJECT TO CANCELLATION.

2. JUNIOR/SENIOR ROOM CONFIRMATION CARDS ARE DUE FRIDAY, JUNE 22.

Room Confirmation Cards will be mailed to your permanent address during the first week in June if you signed up for a room and signed a Residence Hall Contract Card. These Confirmation Cards must be returned to the Housing Assignment Office no later than Friday, June 22, 1990. YOU MUST, FOR YOUR OWN PROTECTION, RETURN YOUR CARD CERTIFIED MAIL RETURN RECEIPT REQUESTED.

3. PAY YOUR FALL FEE BY THE BURSAR'S AUGUST 3, 1990 DUE DATE.

As always, financial obligations must be met by all residents who wish to retain their assignments for the upcoming semester. Fall semester fee bills will be mailed to your permanent address in early July. Failure to pay your bill by the due daye of August 3rd, will immediately cancel your assignment for the Fall.

4. MAKE CERTAIN YOU REMAIN IN GOOD STANDING THROUGHOUT THE SUMMER.

If you are withdrawn for ANY reason after the last day of the semester, your residence hall assignment for the fall will be cancelled.

5. RESIDENCE HALLS CLOSE FOR THE SPRING SEMESTER ON THURSDAY, MAY 24 AT 4 p.m. except for Graduating Seniors.

Make certain that you follow indicated 'check-out' procedures to avoid any unecessary inconvenience or charges.

HAVE A GREAT SUMMER!

Blakey brings tradition to Horse

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Staff

Many of today's jazz musicians have a healthy respect for the tradition. Sometimes this respect gets out of hand (see last week's column), but it is important to recognize the great heritage of jazz. If one person could be singled out for keeping the flame alive, that person is drummer Art Blakey. He will be appearing with the latest edition of his band, the Jazz Messengers, a week from Saturday at the Iron Horse.

Valley Jazz

Art Blakey is a national treasure, one of this country's most important living cultural resources. He is important as one of the most incendiary drummers of all time, as one of the pioneers of "hard bop" in the mid-50s, and as one who reestablished the connection between jazz and African rhythms. But his biggest contribution to the music is as a one-man University of Jazz. His concept, which he has employed throughout his career as a bandleader, is to hire young prodigies (many in their teens), teach them how to swing on the bandstand, and let them go on to their own careers.

The list of musicians that have passed through Blakey's Jazz Messengers reads like a who's who of modern jazz. It would be impossible to mention even half of them in this space, but here are the highlights: in the 50s and 60s, he worked with musicians who are now considered major figures in the music, such as Wayne Shorter, Clifford Brown, Lee Morgan, Horace Silver, Jackie McLean and Freddie Hubbard. Later in the 60s, a few musicians such as Stanley Clarke and Chuck Mangione played with him and went on to pioneer jazz-rock fusion.

Most recently, Blakey's band has been a springboard for just about all of the neo-traditionalist "young lions" on the scene, including the Marsalis brothers, Terence Blanchard, Donald Harrison, Philip Harper and James Williams, as well as more eclectic players like Robin Eubanks and Mulgrew Miller. Just about every musician Blakey has hired has had some degree of solo success; the Blakey pedigree is the jazz world's equivalent of a Harvard diploma.

Blakey's music has clung to the same hard-bop ideals as he invented in the 50s; it is little wonder that this kind of music is now considered jazz's "classic" style. It requires technical mastery of one's instrument and affords plenty of soloing space for each band member, thus allowing players to really show their stuff. And members of the Jazz Messengers get the benefit of rhythmic support from the man Max Roach called "Mr. Thunder."

Now 71-years-old, Blakey appears to be in the twilight of his career. In recent interviews, he has complained of a loss of hearing, although this hasn't affected his playing ability or his ear for young talent. Although his recent recordings have been uneven in quality, he can still deliver live. I think every jazz fan should see Art Blakey at least once while they still have the chance. Every time he takes the stage with his band of prodigies, he gives living testimony to the greatness of the musical tradition called jazz.

Passionate 'Songs for Drella': Reed and Cale create emotion

By RIC OLIVEIRA
Collegian Correspondent

Lou Reed and John Cale
Songs For Drella
Sire Records

Yes, Velvet fans, no more waking up in a cold sweat to find nothing new to satisfy your desires. Lou Reed and John Cale are back, and as disturbing as ever.

Songs For Drella is a memorial for the late Andy Warhol, the original producer of the Velvet Underground. It took over 20 years and a death to do it, but they are here and as angry as ever. The words on this album must have bled through Reed's hand into the pen. On "I Believe" Reed sings, "Valerie Salanis took the elevator, got off at the 4th floor/She pointed the gun at Andy, saying you cannot control me anymore/From inside her idiot madness, smoke and a band/Andy fell onto the floor/I believe being sick is no excuse/I believe I would have pulled the switch myself."

The album was written and performed by Reed and Cale. There are no drums, but plenty of guitar, bass, piano and electric violin. At times there is enough feedback on this album to raise the dead. Some of the songs are written by Reed and Cale through the eyes of Warhol, others are written from Reed's point of view. Most ring with pain and guilt for the things that were left unsaid. In "Hello It's Me," Reed sings to Warhol, "They really hated you, now all that's changed/But I have some resentments that can never be unmade/You hit me where it hurt/I didn't laugh, your diaries were not a fitting epitaph."

"Hello It's Me" is reminiscent of the Velvet classic "Pale Blue Eyes." On the song, Reed explains what led to his firing of Warhol: "No matter what I did it never seemed enough/He said I was lazy, he said I was young/He said how many songs did you write, I'd written zero, but lied and said 10/He said you won't be young forever, you should have written 15."

Songs For Drella marks the second album in a row that Reed has returned to the same style that launched a thousand bands (David Bowie, U2, R.E.M., the Pixies, etc.). Throughout the album, Reed's guitar changes moods, from a soft weeping to a proud defensive screeching.

It must be said that this album is not suited for every mood. It deals with death, and is as depressing as Reed's Berlin. Only "Nobody But You" could ever make it into the top 40, but then again, who cares? This is half of the Velvet Underground and they were no dinosaurs.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Networking could be the best answer if you suddenly find yourself alone. Regular exercise helps restore your vitality. Be firm but gentle with tiny tots. Try to reassure an overanxious friend.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A good day to tackle financial problems. Seek advice from experts. A co-worker shows great interest in your personal affairs. Be cagey – avoid confiding too much. Romance sizzles.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Steer clear of friends' financial schemes. Boredom could lead you to act out of character. An associate's entertainment idea could prove too expensive. Spend the evening at home relaxing.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A misunderstanding can be straightened out. Put personalities aside and stick to the facts. A correct decision may be difficult to reach. Your plans for the evening could change.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do not be in such a hurry. Contracts and agreements should be negotiated with great care. Use the evening to patch up a disagreement with mate. Postpone a business trip in favor of romance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Use your powers of persuasion to smooth over any problems with your co-workers. A financial situation shows improvements, thanks to an expert's advice. Romance could have its ups and downs.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Handle important paperwork. High-ups are impressed with your quickness under fire. Consult a professional before risking your money on speculative real estate deals.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Productivity rises if you refuse to allow pleasure to come before work. A sense of style is important. Avoid making sudden domestic changes. Date someone who has a positive attitude.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Prove your efficiency. Do your own research instead of relying on hearsay. Someone conveys admiration for your mental abilities in a charming way. A longtime relationship is rejuvenated.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You gain widespread support by winning a difficult person over to your views. Write letters and return phone calls. Member of opposite sex has designs on your heart. Be coy.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Patience and diplomacy will help you avoid confrontations with family members. Do not insist on getting privileges from an employer that were not promised. Romance soars to new heights.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Show more tact when working alongside less experienced associates. Today can be a turning point! Resist the temptation to make extravagant gestures designed to impress others. Romance heats up.

Men's track ready for run at N.E. title

Minutemen coming off strong EIAA outing

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Correspondent

If the upcoming New England Men's Track Championships at Northeastern (tomorrow and Saturday, noon) turn out to be the same kind of surprise as the recent EIAA Championships were, then what a pleasant surprise it could be for the University of Massachusetts men's track team.

"I thought it would be difficult for us to repeat last year's [third place] finish," said Minutemen coach Ken O'Brien of last Saturday's EIAA meet, which was held on the campus of Holy Cross in Worcester. "But the kids really pulled together this past week, and gave a real outstanding performance. They proved me wrong."

The Minutemen did just that, placing third with 69.50 points, behind top finisher Rhode Island (125.00 points) and runner-up Southern Connecticut (89.00), but well ahead of the 13-team field.

UMass got off to a good start Saturday, when Kevin Walters set the tone for the afternoon with what O'Brien called "a real outstanding example for the rest of the team."

Walters qualified for the finals in both the 100- and 200-meter, finishing third in the 200 (22.5 seconds) and placing fourth in the 100 (11.2).

Meanwhile, Herb Heffner and Matt Simon both posted their best respective times of the year in the steeplechase, as Heffner took first place in 9:15.7 and Simon followed in third at 9:37.6.

Other high finishers for the Minutemen included Bill Wallace and Tim Campbell, who finished second and fourth respectively in the 10,000-meter. Wallace finished in 32:28.4, with Campbell just seconds behind at 32:30.8.

UMass was successful in field events as well. Dana Borges placed fourth in the long jump, leaping 20-9 3/4, while Joe Kourafas triple-jumped 41-6, good enough for sixth. Brian Bednarek did well in two events, coming in fifth in the high jump (6-3) and sixth in the pole vault (12-6).

As for this weekend's New Englands, O'Brien is hoping for some more outstanding individual performances.

"The competition is much steeper," noted O'Brien, citing Dartmouth, Yale, Boston University, Northeastern and Connecticut as strong favorites.

But as O'Brien also pointed out, "We've got a good solid team, and and we've gotten some real positive efforts of late. The indoor New Englands were tough, and we hope to make up for it outdoors this weekend."

Cyclists capture Northeast crown

The University of Massachusetts bicycle racing club recently captured its third straight Eastern Collegiate Cycling Federation championship, defeating 17 other collegiate cycling teams from almost every state in the Northeast.

For the second year running, UMass hosted the two-day, three-race series to determine which five teams will travel to the Nationals on the West Coast. More than 400 riders competed in four categories: men's A, B, C and women's.

By taking the overall team championship, UMass earned a berth at the National Collegiate Cycling Championships in Los Altos, Calif., at Stanford University on May 19-20.

Two UMass riders also took individual championships. Senior Greg Swinand won the overall men's A by placing fifth in the criterium, second in the road race and first (along with his teammates) in the team time trial.

Kim Morris won the women's title by winning both the criterium and the road race. Despite riding with only one teammate, Morris also took a respectable fifth in the women's time trial.

The five men who will make the trip to California will be chosen from six members of the men's A team: Swinand, from Shrewsbury; freshman Eric Johnson of Holden; senior Alan Cote of Townsend; sophomore Andy Graves of Shelburne Falls; senior Adam Howes of Chatham and senior Tim Stewart of Jefferson City, Mo.

Morris, a sophomore from Dalton who last year finished 14th, will also make the trip.

With more depth this year, UMass hopes to better its eighth place finish in 1989. They have high hopes for a medal in the team time trial.

A look at the puzzling men's lax playoff picture

Gorillas await official decision on Sunday

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

So, is the lacrosse team in the tournament?

Ever since the Gorillas knocked off Brown last Wednesday, that has been the big query. Everyone wants to know if UMass will make the postseason for the fifth year in a row.

The answer, according to general consensus, seems to be: YES.

But where will they play, and who against? Ah, this now is the focal point of debate.

The sticking point every year is that there is no accurate gauge as to how the teams will be seeded for the tournament. Sure, the U.S. Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association comes out with its weekly rankings. But in the past, the NCAA has shown as much faith in those as the American public has for Dan Quayle.

Therefore, the buffer zone between the last regular season game and the official announcement is usually spent trying to guess what the NCAA is going to do. A tactic about as effective as picking the correct Mass. Millions numbers. Actually, worse. At least Mass. Millions has some logic to it.

Whereas most selection criteria consists of stuff like record and strength of schedule, the NCAA regularly goes off on tangents, deciding whether a team's facility has aluminum bleachers or serves decaffeinated coffee at the food stands.

Basically, it's a crap shoot. Nobody knows for sure. But that doesn't mean we can't try to sort it out.

Ergo: a wild stab at the postseason mess (the real thing, so to speak, will be announced Sunday at 2 p.m.).

Syracuse (10-0): There really should be a separate tournament for the Orangemen. Maybe if it was Gary and Paul Gait by themselves, 2-on-10, it would be fair. Only North Carolina and Penn have been within five goals of 'Cuse, which also plays the toughest schedule in the country.

Yale (15-1): This is legitimately the second team in the country, but Syracuse coach Roy Simmons doesn't feel the Elis played a tough schedule. Harvard knocked them off in double-OT and a few teams gave them good games. Everyone who's lost to them wants a second crack.

North Carolina (10-3): Another killer schedule. Lost to Syracuse, 14-9, No. 4 Loyola, 11-10 and No. 6 Virginia, 14-13. Has the power to make some noise in the tournament.

Loyola (8-2): Has beaten Rutgers, Virginia and UNC, but lost to Brown and Penn State. A hard team to figure out, and one that usually screws up in the postseason. Plays Delaware on Saturday, but that shouldn't change anything.

Harvard (10-2): Another of those Ivy League teams that everyone wants to play again. The only team to beat Yale, but also lost to New Hampshire as well as Brown. Has played a lot of close games this season.

Virginia (10-4): Has lost to some of the better teams (Yale, North Carolina, Loyola). Beat UNC in the regular season, but the Heels got their revenge in the ACC Tournament.

Princeton (10-3): Losses to Johns Hopkins, Yale and Harvard are not too upsetting. Has knocked off Navy, Brown, Penn and Cornell. Still plays Hofstra on Friday, and a loss there isn't out of the question (which would mess up everything).

Johns Hopkins (6-4): Seems to have recovered from its midseason swoon, if you could call it that. Losses to Rutgers (when it had Andy DeCicco in the lineup), Syracuse, Virginia and North Carolina aren't terrible, but the Jays used to be able to beat those teams.

UMass (10-4): The knock last year was that the Gorillas didn't beat any teams in the Top 10. This year they beat Brown, which was enough to get them in. Things would have been much different if they'd beaten Cornell.

Brown (10-4): Was rolling along in the top four until losing to UMass and Cornell. Previous losses came to Yale and Princeton, both by close scores. Wins over Harvard and Loyola will help out the Bruins' cause.

Rutgers (8-4): Here's where it gets interesting. This week's USILA poll had the Knights 11th, right on the fringe (11 teams from the East get bids). They've lost to Loyola, Princeton, Syracuse and UMass. But the biggie is that they are hosting the Final Four. Enter the "Maryland Factor." Last year, the NCAA put Maryland as fourth seed to railroad them into the semis (read: gate money). Look for the same to happen this year.

Towson State (11-2): Better record than anyone but Syracuse and Yale. But they played only two teams in the Top 15 and lost both (17-12 to Loyola, 12-9 to Hopkins). Not a good sign, especially with the Rutgers situation.

Other longshots: Traditional favorites Maryland, Navy, Penn and Cornell have had rough seasons. It's not likely any of them will be able to squeeze in. But remember, this is the NCAA.

The West Coast: The battle for the designated Western weakling to get manhandled by the No. 5 seed comes down to Notre Dame and Michigan State.

And now finally, the predictions:

1. Syracuse; 2. North Carolina; 3. Yale; 4. Loyola; 5. Virginia; 6. Harvard; 7. Princeton; 8. Johns Hopkins; 9. UMass; 10. Rutgers; 11. Brown; 12. Notre Dame.

Why? Even though Yale (this will make more sense later on) had the schedule, they haven't played the teams Carolina has. Likewise for Virginia over Harvard, since the committee will probably try to get Virginia in the Final Four (they can beat Loyola).

One of the things everyone has been mentioning is regional matchups. Harvard vs. Brown would be a good draw, as would Rutgers vs. Princeton.

In the next round, the folks would plan on Johns Hopkins against Syracuse (they drew 18,000 at the Dome earlier this year) and the survivor of Harvard-Princeton playing Yale — another pure Ivy match.

Once again, good o' American dough will talk, and the NCAA will be listening with undivided attention. But these things always have a way of backfiring somehow. Like, if UMass were to beat Hopkins. No one wants to be in the Syracuse bracket, but it appears only a Harvard-UMass match (UMass seeded 11th) would change that picture.

Will UMass and Harvard meet again in the postseason? They'll find out when the pairings are announced Sunday.

SCATTERBRAIN

HERE COMES TROUBLE

By DANIELLE DOWLING
Collegian Staff

Every once in a while life throws you a curve ball.

You think you have the ways of the world down pat. You've figured out that crunchy boogers taste better than mushy ones, what else is there to figure out?

You think you've got the music scene figured out too. Each group has a certain musical genre that it has to fit, and that's that. But then, a group comes along that defies all definitions. Trying to fit this square peg of a group into the round categorial holes that you have designed, proves to be as difficult a task as it is to stick a pogo stick up Jesse Helms' tight buttocks.

Scatterbrain is such a group. The sound that they have created on their debut release, Here Comes Trouble, has music reviewers, record execs, and the members of the group themselves, scrambling for words to describe it. Some have tried in vain to compare Scatterbrain to groups like the Red Hot Chili Peppers or Faith No More, but guitarist Glenn Cummings finds this inappropriate.

"We're like an inbred music creature from the suburbs of Long Island," he said in an attempt to make a description. "Our sound? I guess it's a little bit of hardcore, a little bit of speed metal, a little bit of classic and southern rock, a little bit of everything hopefully with a sense of humor behind it."

It's their sense of humor that Cummings said is getting the group a lot of attention. "We didn't realize that we had so many fun

Bullet LaVolta targets Pearl Street

By STEVE CLARK
Collegian Correspondent

Get ready for a refreshing sound from the rock underground: it's Bullet LaVolta, the punk/metal band from Boston.

Bullet LaVolta is said to position itself in the area between the Cult and Guns 'n' Roses, according to the Boston Globe. Spin magazine describes their music as having "too much sex for hardcore, too much wit for metal." And the Boston Phoenix claims that "LaVolta's overkill is too smart to be called metal, too deliberately arranged to qualify as post-punk noise."

So what is LaVolta? As described by Taang! records, their sound is "massive," "literally gigantic," "pure rock power without the annoying histrionics." The company maintains that the music of LaVolta is something that will be played 10 years from now due to its intangible, elusive quality. Taang! cited the band's major influences as well, which include AC/DC, the Stooges, Motorhead, the Damned and the Rolling Stones.

Frontman Yukki Gipe explained to the Globe exactly how he became inspired: "There weren't a lot of bands going over the top, going out like they had a fire in their pants . . . We wanted to go full force all the time and attack the stage, make an impact. We've grown a lot as far as songwriting. We know what we're doing a little more."

LaVolta started in Jan. 1987, when bassist Bill Whelan, guitarist Clay Tarver, and drummer Chris Cougar Guttmacher teamed up as a band. Another guitarist, Corey Brennan, joined as well, and from there frontman Gipe was recruited. Kenny Chambers replaced Brennan that Sept., which led to a sound that Taang! claimed was nearly erotic.

An album was recorded by the band in 1989 called The Gift, with producer/engineer Paul Kolderie. Following the album Guttmacher left to be replaced by 19-year-old Todd Phillips, and the band promptly went on tour to Germany and the U.K., among other international locales. Their act was sold-out in the clubs in which they played.

"These guys can fire off deadly sniper solos and dead-on barre-chord bazooka blasts with the best of them," raves the College Music Journal (CMJ) New Music Report. CMJ describes their more recent work as being more accessible to general audiences while not lowering the adrenaline level one bit.

Now local fans can judge the act for themselves on Saturday, May 12, at Pearl Street. Bullet LaVolta will begin their show at 8:30 p.m. for 18+.

Original film by UMass student debuts tonight

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

Film fans: prepare to spend tonight with the comedy of "John Everidge, a suburban youth with romantic visions of the blues who tries to make a drastic change in his life by hitch-hiking to New Orleans."

Enter Zachary Slovinsky.

Slovinsky decided about a year ago, after a few production classes at New York University, that he wanted hands-on experience in creating films, and saw it as an opportunity for students to learn by participating and watching.

"It began over a year ago. I began filming during the summer," Slovinsky said.

He said he filmed the feature-length production, with its cast of 19 actors and actresses, in his hometown of Needham, as well as surrounding towns. The story was co-written by three of the actors: Slovinsky (Catfish), John Havens (suburban youth John) and Andy Havens (Ivo — pizza delivery slug).

Slovinsky said he and (Andy) Havens spent weeks of 14-hour days filling in the dialogue of the film.

He also spent some $600 of his own money on expenses. All actors and actresses were volunteers. "They did it for experience and for their portfolios," Slovinsky said.

Slovinsky, a junior communications major said the film is semi-auto-biographical. "I'm really into music and film and I thought this would be one way of incorporating both," he said.

He is presenting this project for a Comparative Literature class in Italian film.

It's the tale of John Everidge who is on summer vacation from college. He loves Blues more than life itself and owns hundreds of records, to which he can lip-sync every verse of every song with intimate precision.

When John tries to convince his "couch-potatoesque" friend Ivo that he needs a slight revolution in his life and is going to hitch-hike to New Orleans to find his soul as a musician, Ivo does not understand.

Neither does his mother, who has plans to make him wear the straight-jacket of a Century 21 real estate agent for his summer. Naturally, this man seeking transformation rebels and determines to hitch to the Deep South while mom is on a three-day business trip.

. . . What happens next is a narrative to see.

Slovinsky said: "As far as the story goes, it's kind of like a lot of people's lives. It's a simple story."

He said all it takes to put something like this together is a lot of determination and a desire strong enough to get the story out.

"It's a need to tell a story, it's not so much the technical proficiency involved, it's the fact that there is a soul of the story," Slovinsky said.

The film will be shown tonight, 9:45 p.m. in Room 231, Herter Hall. FREE.

All that Jazz

One-time lead trumpeter of the Count Basie big-band and Broadway star Byron Stripling, will join the UMass Chapel Jazz Ensemble tonight at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

Stripling's piercing trumpeting, powerful singing, and charming stage presence are a tremendous addition to the award-winning Chapel Jazz Ensemble, which recently placed second in the 1990 College Jazz Festival at Boston University. He will perform traditional and contemporary works ranging from swing to rock and roll, under the direction of Professor Dave Sporny.

The Chapel Jazz Ensemble will also perform tunes by Bob Mintzer, Count Basie, Herbie Hancock, and others. The virtuosity of student soloists including saxophonists Gerry Merra and Jim Thomas.

Scatterbrain to scramble Katina's lyrics in our songs. Then all of a sudden, we were getting these positive reviews saying, 'Finally, a band with a sense of humor and they have musical content.' Instead of a band that can only play two chords and do funny lyrics, this actually has music that can stand on its own with lyrics that have a sense of humor."

Scatterbrain spawned from the demise of the speed metal/hardcore/crossover group Ludichrist at the end of last year. Deciding to break the boundaries and limitations of the sound they had developed in Ludichrist, former members Tommy Christ, lead vocalist and chief lyric writer, Paul Nieder, lead guitarist, and Cummings joined forces with bassist Guy Brogna and drummer Mike Boyko to produce a more diversified sound.

"Everyone in the band comes from a real different music background," Cummings explained. "When some of us were in Ludichrist, we were writing to be a hardcore band or a speed oriented band. We were writing for an audience. Now we write for ourselves and it's working out better."

Knowing how fanatical some hardcore and speed metal fans are, one has to question how the group's album has been received by this faction of the underground audience.

"I think they really dig the material," Cummings said depicting audience reaction so far. "At shows, we've been getting a real good reaction and we have yet to hear, 'You guys sold out.' I don't think anybody construes it that way. I know we don't."

The lyrics cover a wide range of topics — heartbreak that causes the main protagonist to snap upon the utterance of the word "Dude"("Don't Call Me Dude"); a person who has always made fun of stupid people wakes up to find to his horror that he has grown a second head("I'm with Stupid"); and a drunken milkman whose unfortunate meeting with a family four makes them a family no more("Drunken Milkman").

But the lyrics are not all tongue in cheek. Two of the songs off the album, "Here Comes Trouble" and "Outta Time," deal with lyricist Tommy Christ's personal experience with drugs and alcohol. Cummings explained, "'Here Comes Trouble' is a chronicle of Tommy's life in a period of a week. All of these wonderful events(spilling blood, trashing bars, waking up in the street or in a strange place or in a prison) in his life lead him to write this autobiographical little ditty.

"I know the same to be true with 'Outta Time.' He was living on the lower East Side in Manhattan for about a year and a half and a lot of his friends took a turn for the worse and this put him in a somber mood," Cummings continued. "He tried to put a twist in the lyrics as far as who's point of view it is, so that there's no things like, 'You're an asshole if you do this' or 'You're an asshole if you do that.' We wanted to make it have a message, but not a preachy one."

But back on the lighter side of things, one of the most impressive tracks on this album is the group's cover of Mozart's Sonata No. 3. That's right Mozart. So impressed was guitar virtuoso Joe Satriani that he gave it his enthusiastic thumbs up.

When asked what possed the group to do a cover of Mozart's Sonata No. 3, Cummings replied, "All of us, except for Tommy, have an interest in classical music. We got together and said, 'Let's do a classical piece, but let's do one that's kind of fun. Let's do it in the tradition of Bugs Bunny instead of Yngwie Malmsteen and see if we can pull it off.'"

Summing it all up, Cummings compared the group's music to the work of Californian artist Robert Williams, whose art work adorns their album cover. "His concepts are very witty. He paints very well. I'd like to think, to compare ourselves to that, that we can play very well and we have a pretty good vision of what life is about. So we can make fun of it. We can be real wise-asses without sounding like rednecks."

Scatterbrain will play Katina's on Sunday. Opening for them will be local speed/thrash metal groups, Judgement Day and Rapid Symphony. The show starts at 9 p.m.

Phish is easily the greatest unsigned band in the country, but all that is about to change.

"We don't exactly have a record contract yet," says bassist Mike Gordon, "but we have a lot of interest. We haven't definitely signed one, but Absolute A Go-Go is a possibility.

"There seems to be a trend in major record labels to pick up bands that are sort of different, that have a good college following and obscure lyrics," he says.

Whatever record company is lucky enough to sign the Burlington, Vt., band will have scored the coup of the decade. Phish is that good, and that original.

Although Phish often gets categorized as a Grateful Dead wannabee band, they are far more. Their influences range from Pat Metheny to Frank Zappa to Igor Stravinsky, and they incorporate all the sounds — funk, blues, country, jazz and calypso — into their music. If they are compared to the Dead, it is only because their fans wear tie-dyes and their music has that same spontaneous, fresh feel that is so badly missing from today's pop music.

On their recent Colorado tour, in which they sold-out venues of over 1,000 people, Gordon remembers, "One fan came up to me after a show and said, 'You guys are a cross between Frank Zappa and George Clinton,' which was nothing I ever heard before, but it was great."

It's not unusual for Phish to go off and jam for 15 minutes in the middle of a song, but they are not boring jams. Their complex harmonies go somewhere. You don't have to be tripping to appreciate them (but it wouldn't hurt either).

"We definitely have a feeling of spontaneity onstage," says Gordon. "If we play a rhythm we never played before, we go with it and that makes for a good show. We smile a lot."

Many of their classic tunes, "Golgi Apparatus," "You Enjoy Myself" and "The Divided Sky," consist of minimal words and maximum rhythm. Your voice may not be able to sing along, but your mind and body can.

When Phish does put lyrics in their songs, they're just as clever and refreshing as their music. Sure, they have the simple, yet original songs like "Dinner and a Movie," whose lyrics consist entirely of "Let's go out to dinner and see a movie." But there's also songs such as "Fee," a comical song about a man who lives with a psychotic woman who killed her old boyfriend, Floyd. "Floyd is dead; he's nothing but a ripple/Cause Milly took that paper/And sliced him on the nipple."

Then there's the musical, The Man Who Stepped Into Yesterday, that songwriter/guitarist Trey Anastasio penned when he was a senior majoring in songwriting composition at Goddard College. It's a 10-song epic that takes place in the mystical land of Gamehenge, where the evil emperor, King Wilson, presides over subjects of lizards.

Although Gordon admits he "hasn't taken Trey's musical to heart," he says the band is considering releasing it as an album, or possibly a theater or animation production. The band has played the entire musical in concert before. "It's a strange thing to do in a bar," Gordon says, "but it's cool because no other band is doing it. It's cool because it's not about love and other stuff that pop songs are written about."

Phish takes pride in their originality. "Our goal is to play more styles of music and to play them better," says Gordon. "We're honing in on our own sound. It's been a goal to move away from our influences."

Their originality extends to their stage presence, where drummer/trombonist Jon Fishman occasionally plays the vacuum, and the band often stray from its set list and jumps on trampolines. "We have a choreographed set trampoline session where we all jump in the same way at the same time, and that's kind of cool," says Gordon. "But there's also songs where we just kind of jump around. I guess that describes our music, too."

Definitely.

Phish has no intentions of selling out to get signed by a major label. "If we got an offer from Atlantic, it probably wouldn't be wise to sign with them right now," says Gordon. "The major labels try to sign you to long record deals, influence your music, change your image and give you a small percentage. We won't change for a record company."

Take their latest demo tape, Lawn Boy. Although it has some 5-minute songs on it to get the band airplay, it also has many longer jams, including "Reba," about a crazy woman who makes meat in a very interesting way. The band is also thinking of releasing a tape of longer jams.

In any event, they'll do what they want.

"We like it the way it is now," says Gordon. "We've got people who come down and dance to our songs. If getting signed means taking that away, we don't want it."

Phish plays a 21-and-over show tonight at Pearl Street. Tickets for the 8 p.m. show are $8.

Students join in 'On What Ground'

By NICK OSTIS
Collegian Correspondent

Tomorrow and Saturday, UMass choreographers Katherine Sanderson and Billy Yalowitz will present On What Ground, a program of five diverse works unified by themes of ancestry, memory and identity woven together in a tapestry of modern dance, theater and video with original music and texts.

A collaboration by students from UMass, Hampshire and Smith Colleges and members of the Dance Gallery/Syllepsis performance ensemble in Hadley, On What Ground also delves into the subjects of intercultural alliances, oppression and cultural heritage based on the students' individual experiences.

In the early 1970s when Sanderson found herself spending more time on a half-credit dance class than on a five credit calculus class (which she failed twice) at the University of California Santa Barbara, she decided to follow her heart's desire. In so doing, she moved to Utah to concentrate on choreography. She jokes, "I'm 6'2', have three left feet and no formal dance training." What she does have, however, is tenacity and perseverance. Also a set designer, she is the last survivor of four original partners in the Dance Gallery. "As a choreographer, it's impossible to survive," she laments. Then why does she continue? "This is what I do," she answers friendly but firmly.

Her associate, Yalowitz, a dancer-saxophonist with a narrator's mellifluous dream voice, recalls his introduction to Sanderson's Der Kinder Machine (German for "Child Machine") one of the pieces on the program. "I was studying the male gender role from more of a psychological perspective and was stunned by how accurate a portrayal in image and movement Der Kinder Machine was in how one gets engendered. The work has many layers to it: memory, family and the rites of initiation into manhood."

Adds Sanderson, "The choices it would like man to make are so slanted that, of course, he makes those choices. In this piece it's seduction of advertising; it's a seduction of shiny, enticing toys, a series of things which pops out of this ox and induces the child to go along with a particular pathway."

One gets the sense that Sanderson and Yalowitz have waged — at least inwardly — and won the battle to accept and appreciate who they are on their own terms.

On What Ground will be performed on May 11 and 12 at 8 p.m. in Hampden Theater, and at the East Street Dance Theater at 47 East St. in Hadley on May 17, 18 and 19 at 8 p.m.

Thank you UMass Blood Donors for over 3,000 units of blood this year!

TRIBUTE TO A UMASS BLOOD DONOR

No badge of service does he wear,
He lives, a "Hero" unaware,
A man who rolls his sleeve to give,
His blood, to help another live.
Who gives without re turn of fee,
In simple answer to a plea
That flush of health again may glow
On cheeks of one he'll never know.
His blood a new-born babe may save
From yawning brink of early grave,
That child, so weak and small today,
A Hero's role may later play.
Or one, a prey to accident,
By his blood new strength is lent.
His blood may help a surgeon's knife.
Bridge the gap from death to life.
No, none of these will know his name,
Nor see it carved on walls of fame;
But we who toil that man may live,
A hearty, humble "Thank You" give.
Give Blood!
Give Life!

Latin American Week ends today

Past week's cultural meaning reflected upon by community

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

As Latin American Week at the University of Massachusetts comes to a close with a dance tonight and a picnic tomorrow, Ahora, the largest Latino organization on campus and sponsor of latin American Week hopes the community will come away with a better understanding of Latino culture.

"Latino culture is very diverse and a lot of people on this campus just don't know that," Felipe Barreda, former president of Ahora, said.

"Not many people in this country have a good perception of what Latin American culture is, not even people who support Latin America," he said.

The purpose of Latin American Week is to educate people about the Latino culture and make them aware of the issues that Latinos face here and in their own countries, Barreda said.

The week will commence tomorrow with a picnic where there will be a band (Los Principes del Merengue), volleyball, clowns and typical Latino food.

"The main purpose of this activity is to bring diversity," Jose A. Touzon, president of Ahora, said. "We're bringing little kids from the community, elderly people from the community, all of them from different backgrounds to participate in this activity."

The festivities started on Tuesday with a reception and dinner at Memorial Hall. On Wednesday, an exposition featuring work from Latino artists was displayed in the Campus Center Auditorium. Last night, there was a movie marathon.

"We want to let the people know how our culture is," Touzon said. "You can't talk about one culture. You have to talk about many cultures in the Latino community. But we share a common language and common values and we hope to share those with the rest of the communities."

Latin American week started in 1974, the same year that Ahora, a registered student organization, was created. The Week has been held each year since then.

"The reason the activity got started in the first place is because there have been a lot of stereotypes of Latinos on campus," Barreda said.

But it has not been easy for Ahora to sponsor the event every year. The organization, like many others at UMass, has felt the crunch of the budget cuts, according to Barreda. In the last five years, Ahora's funding has been cut by $5,000.

The Undergraduate Student Senate has given Ahora progressively less money for each of the past four years. Ahora has had to go to the Finance Committee each year to ask for more money for Latin American Week.

"The funding is so inadequate for what our organization does," Barreda said. "All we want is a budget that is proportional to Latino students that come to UMass each year."

"Considering that by the year 2015 when it is projected that Spanish-speaking people in this country will be the majority ethnic community in this country, the need to make Latino culture visible is important."

While Barreda says that one of the focuses of the Week is to bring Latinos together in unity, Ahora is also trying to bring other communities together with the Latinos. Asians and Afro-Americans have also joined the festivities.

"We want to expand out to the multicultural community," Norma Rivera de Acosta, a UMass student, said. "We want to be an organization that represents and supports multiculturalism."

The Week is also a time for Latinos to think about themselves, Barreda said.

"One of the reasons we need to have a Latin American week is to have one week of the year where we can say we are proud to be Latinos," Barreda said.

Poet-prof stays modest

Irish Prof. Muldoon speaks of craft

By KERRY HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

Despite the recognition and international acclaim University of Massachusetts visiting Associate Professor Paul Muldoon has received for his talent as a poet, he modestly claims his poems "write themselves."

Muldoon, who received the 1990 John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation Fellowship for poetry, believes "there is something bigger than the poet" in his work. The prestigious Guggenheim fellowship is awarded to 143 artists, scholars and scientists "partly for achievement, partly for promise," Muldoon said.

Much of Muldoon's writing has its roots in Northern Ireland where he grew up. He began writing "a lot" when he was about 15 and realized it was something he wanted to pursue.

"I had very interesting poetry teachers and I became interested in modern poetry," Muldoon said. "I read a lot of T.S. Eliot and tried to write like him, only to realize his voice is so much his own, no one can copy it."

Muldoon published his first poem around the age of 17 in Belfast with the help of Seamus Heaney, a prominent contemporary Irish poet. From there, he started concentrating on his poetry at Queens University in Belfast.

'Muldoon said, 'Poetry has just become a habit," adding with a chuckle, "I don't know if it is a good habit or bad, but it is one which turned into an obsession."

Since his debut into the literary scene, he has published five books of poetry. The sixth one titled, Madoc: A Mystery will be coming out in England later this year. With this work he has established himself as a prominent contemporary Irish poet.

Paul Muldoon in a lyrical mood.

Peggy O'Brien, coordinator of the five college Irish studies program said Muldoon is a "very important poet in the English speaking world."

"As an Irish poet, he has managed to deal with Irish themes and deployed a number of poetic strategies that aren't indigenous to the Irish tradition," O'Brien said. "Beyond being Irish, he has an utterly original and completely individual voice which is unmistakable."

Muldoon said anything can inspire him to write. Usually it is a phrase which he hasn't thought of before.

"What I do after I think of an idea is I wait for a while for another image," Muldoon said. "Then I try to get them married."

Muldoon's poetic voice is something which he tries not to characterize.

Negotiations progress for GEO, agreements may be reached

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

An agreement regarding a fall union election of graduate student employees now seems to be just days away, a member of the Graduate Employee Organization and a University of Massachusetts administrator said yesterday.

Marc Kenen, GEO negotiating committee member said 'significant progress' was made at yesterday's negotiation session with only minor issues left to be resolved.

"The administration demonstrated its commitment to meeting our demands and concerns," he said.

Kenen said the administration agreed to GEO's demand not to use department and dean level meetings to discuss the unionization effort, which was a major concern of the membership.

"They agreed to our demand not to use these meetings to persuade members about the unionization," he said. "We felt it would be intimidating setting for graduate employees."

Kenen also said that significant progress on issues such as "curriculum fees, job security and working conditions" were made at yesterday's negotiation session.

He declined to elaborate further on these issues which divide the two sides at this point in negotiations.

Susan Pearson, director of academic administration and the administration's negotiator, agreed with Kenen's belief that significant progress had been made.

Pearson said an agreement is likely to be reached during Monday's scheduled negotiation session.

"There are no major stumbling blocks now," she said. "We are very close to an agreement. There are no major issues which separate us now."

Pearson also declined to discuss the specific issues that are problematic but said it revolves mostly around 'procedural and language details.'

In the most recent series of negotiations, the two sides were unable to agree over three stipulations — administration support before the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission, administration's neutrality during the elections process and no-strike pledge of the GEO — before a union election, now set for October 25, could be scheduled.

On Wednesday, the GEO suspended its threat to withhold final grades and agreed to make 'major concessions' in a move they hoped would prod the administration into a agreement.

According to the most recent figures from the GEO, of the some 2,300 graduate student employees, 1,409 are members of GEO, an affiliate of District 65/United Auto Workers.

Prof sees problems with U.N.O.

In 1988, the people of Nicaragua moved to decentralize Sandinista national social reforms to the community level, creating a dynamic of self-sufficiency which should survive the recent election turnover of governmental power, an anthropology professor said last night.

Michael Higgins, a professor at the University of Northern Colorado, gave a presentation titled 'Revolution Without a State: Government from Below in Nicaragua' to a group in the Campus Center. He has spent the last five years studying a barrio (neighborhood) in Managua, Nicaragua.

"For the last three or four years, almost all projects carried out in Nicaragua have been privately, not state funded," he said. "U.N.O (the National Opposition) cannot claim these houses, schools, and daycares

Governors battle over graduate attendance

By LAVINIA GAMMON
Collegian Staff

The Board of Governors spring term ended last night with a heated debate resulting in an amendment to their constitution stating that graduate govenors must attend one full board meeting a month.

This proposal was brought into question in hopes of settling a problem the BOG has been having with low graduate govenor attendance of weekly meetings.

According to Sue Gordon, BOG chair, the graduate govenors say they are very interested in remaining an active part of the BOG, but feel they do not have as much free time to put into weekly meetings as the undergraduate governors do.

Gov. Guy Glodis, whose election to the board was approved last night, was outraged at the proposed amendment, saying he felt it was unfair that undergraudate governors have to attend a weekly meeting while graduate governors would only have to attend once a month. "I don't think we should be changing our constitution. It is a double standard," he said.

Gov. Ed Corrigan counter-argued, "If we don't put this motion through we are facing zero funding [from the graduate students]."

Two dollars per graduate student is given to the BOG each semester. The net loss of this money would total $8,000. After a lengthy debate, the board voted 14-1-0 in favor of amending the constitution.

In other BOG events:

- New officers were elected for next fall. Govenors Bill Hewitt, Jordan Fisch, Kelly Keeler, and Co-govenors Ted Maravelias and Bob Monaghan won seats on the executive commitee. The four open positions for RSO space allocation commitee were filled by Bob Davidson, Guy Glodis, Ted Maravelias, and Liz Hart. Govenors O'Neil Hardy and Steve Garcia were elected to the budget commitee.
- The debate on selling pronography in the Campus Center/Student Union was put aside until next fall.
- During last night's meeting, Gov. Mark Adler drafted a letter to the Collegian executive staff showing his 'dismay' at the firing of Collegian reporter Darren Garnick, who covered the BOG's weekly board meetings. A twenty-minute debate ensued when he asked for a unanimous BOG endorsement.

Gov. Craig Fraser argued that if the BOG showed their support for this letter they would be asked to support everyone who loses their job.

Support group helps gay faculty

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

Lesbian, bisexual, gay teachers and professors live a "double life" out of the fear they will be fired because of their sexual orientation, a gay education expert said yesterday.

According to Dr. Patricia Griffin, co-chair of the Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Faculty and Staff Support Group at the University of Massachusetts and organizer of the Gay and Lesbian Educators Network, homosexual educators always perform a juggling act to hide their sexual identity.

"Gay educators need a support network to know they're not alone," she said.

Griffin said the UMass Faculty and Staff Support Group was formed in the spring of 1986 after a visit by Paul Cameron, a conservative activist who is anti-homosexual. His views raised concern among many members of the faculty.

In the early stages of the group, Griffin said its primary focus was to look at solutions for homophobic harassment, but has since branched out to provide social opportunities as well as plan strategies to assist students.

"We wanted to form a faculty support group based on successful models we saw in Afro-American and the Jewish communities," she said.

The group currently has over 100 members and is presently organizing programs for faculty and staff in addition to grievance procedures for benefits, she said.

"There are questions as to who is considered a family member in regards to insurance and leave," she said. "We also make sure the University makes their discrimination policy clear."

Griffin said the Support Group is also looking at the development of an academic program of gay and lesbian studies which would be recognized as a general education requirement. The Group is also interested in developing a Five College area program as well.

As the result of a sabbatical project in 1987, Griffin said she also developed the Gay and Lesbian Educators Network, which began with 15 members and quickly grew to 150.

She said gay educators have a difficult time being honest with students. "Students always have questions about their teacher's lives, and often times they can't answer their students honestly," she said.

Gay, lesbian and bisexual teachers are often in a better position to help minority students because they are more sensitive to their needs, she said, and more sensitive to the needs of students in general.

"Up to 30 percent of teenage suicides are gay and lesbian related, if their teachers could be open, these kids could feel they had someone to talk to about their problems and wouldn't feel as isolated," she said.

"Just Say No" program uses fun to educate children

By MARGARET McATEER
Collegian Staff

Students in the University of Massachusetts Just Say No program know that comic books and stickers are a sure way to get a child's attention. That's why they use them to tell fourth-graders at the Pelham Elementary School about the dangers of drugs.

Members of the newly founded UMass chapter of the Just Say No program made their first school visit last Thursday.

Janet Rubinstein, a UMass student and president of Just Say No, said the program's purpose is to show elementary school children that successful students made it without drugs. "We're positive role models," Rubinstein said.

Rubinstein said comic books and stickers made the presentation fun, and this kind of 'fun education' works best in teaching children about drugs.

"The kids absolutely loved it," she said.

The program concentrates on those students in grade four and five because statistics say that a quarter of all fourth grade children will experiment with drugs and that over 50 percent of drugs are bought in schools, according to Rubinstein.

Rubinstein said that many of the the children she spoke with at the Pelham Elementary School knew a lot about drugs but were surprised at the amount of children their age who experiment with drugs.

"The kids didn't really want to believe it," she said. She blamed part of this disbelief on confusion over the word 'experiment.' Many children thought if you experimented with drugs you were addicted to them, she said.

According to Michael MacDonald, vice-president of the UMass chapter of the Golden Key National Honor Society, Just Say No is a service project of the honor society, which is comprised of seniors and juniors with grade point averages in the top 15 percent of their class.

In her talk on Thursday, Rubinstein stressed that 'It's important to be a leader and not do anything you don't want to do.'

Rubinstein said the Just Say No Program is just getting off the ground but she hopes to build up its membership next semester. Anyone who feels they have something significant to tell or just wants to help is welcome to join, she said.

Correction

In yesterday's article "SGA approves $2M fiscal year budget," a statement made by Student Government Association Treasurer Karen Talbot and Senator Richard Sugarman was incorrectly reported.

While speaking in favor of a lower funding level for the New World Theatre, Talbot and Sugarman said the $5,000 approved by the Senate vote was an appropriate sum of money.

The Collegian regrets the error.

because they have private owners through the support of international solidarity groups."

The unexpected win of U.N.O. over the revolutionary Sandinista government last February puts into question the continuance of progressive reforms initiated by the Sandinistas but carried out by local groups such as the Community for the Defense of Sandino, he said.

"U.N.O. won because they promised people they wouldn't have to do anything," he said. "As austere and as limited as the Sandinistas services were, they relied on volunteers to run it because they could motivate the people to work."

Although Nicaraguans maintained a strong sense of nationalistic pride, they became frustrated with the bureaucracy and sectarianism of the Sandinista government, he said. He said the message from community organizers was "Don't ask the government. The government can't solve our problems, only we can."

"They were told to organize in any fashion relevant to the community that they live in and to eliminate middle bureaucracy by mass organization leaders," he said.

He said communities organized their own housing projects, health clinics, and food cooperatives to survive in the chaotic, devastated economy created by many years of "low intensity warfare" with the U.S.-funded contra armies. Their self-dependency stemmed from a lack of government funds and subsidies which created a distance between the local communities and the government, he said.

"I don't know if people will work that hard under U.N.O," he said. "U.N.O is going to be in a difficult situation if the communities won't do it."

He said international solidarity groups should still stay involved with Nicaraguan projects "with the same critical scrutiny" of the U.N.O. government as with the Sandinistas.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted

Hillel: a propaganda outlet?

We all have a fairly good idea where A.I.P.A.C., the highly influential Jewish lobby, recruits its propagandists (who always seem to be controlling the U.S. media).

In Hillel's April 30th page-long petition in the Collegian, they informed us that they "are appalled by the comparisons drawn between. . . Israel and. . . South Africa." Frankly, I'd be appalled, too.

Mazen Credi

The page goes on to say how Israel "condemns Apartheid." Fine, they condemn it, but they feel that it is perfectly all right to trade and share advanced military technology with a country based on the very same Apartheid system which they enthusiastically condemn as racists.

So, in writing that, did Hillel take us to be a University filled with idiots who just don't bother to understand what they read? What was that? You feel insulted? I'd be insulted, too.

Hillel describes Israel as a "true" democracy, in some cases seemingly more democratic than our own country: "Contrary to the United States, the Israeli parliament passed laws indicating that racism is not protected by freedom of expression."

It goes on to say how the Israeli Supreme Court had banned a racist party from participating in the last elections. Just the fact that Israel had such a problem with racist parties shows how broad a base a racist party can attain in Israel. Such legislation is not needed here in the U.S. because over here people don't listen to racist party leaders.

Furthermore Hillel states, "Israel is the only true democracy in the Middle East," as if Israel was a golden jewel shining in front of a background of the bland disfigurement of the Arab states. First of all, Israel is not a true democracy. I do not believe that a country which harasses, beats and kills people within its territory to be anywhere near a state of true democracy.

Right now, Israel is at the same stage of its democratic progress as when Blacks were degraded in the U.S. Israel does not look like the democracy which Hillel wants everyone to think it is. Why do they want you to think this? Simple. Because instead of letting the U.S. keep its own $3 BILLION a year, Israel wants the U.S. to keep sending it right along.

How can anyone find it logical that the U.S. is giving Israel money to help it with an influx of Russian settlers while there are thousands of homeless across the country from New York to Los Angeles?

Israel has become a burdensome ally for the U.S.

I thought Hillel was a Jewish Cultural Center and not an Israeli propaganda outlet. If Hillel is founded along religious lines, I see this political outspokenness a little distressing.

I surely don't see Newman Center writing such outrageous things. Luckily for them (and us) the Vatican is in a nice, peaceful place where it's always been all these years.

SWAG angered by mistreatment

According to the Collegian and various members of the UMass community, the Southwest Area Government bailed out of the UPC concert and left them high and dry. WRONG. As a member of the executive staff, I'd like to explain what really happened.

Last fall, UPC asked us to go in with them for the spring concert so UMass could have one huge concert instead of a bunch of little concerts in each of the five living areas.

Each living area has a concert fund that they are allowed to use for their own area, and each individual government surrendered their fund to UPC. UPC asked SWAG to give up their fund and also contribute $10,000.

We initially supported the idea with the understanding that the concert would be held in the stadium and we would get a big name like U2 or REM.

Later, when we heard that these conditions changed, and since UPC didn't keep us updated, we decided not to give them the additional $10,000; that is an additional $10,000, excluding the $10,000 we surrendered to them from our concert fund.

Instead, we used that money to provide a benefit show with Jerry Seinfeld to set up a scholarship for the three students from Southwest whom we lost this year: Sharon Galligan, Joel Mangion, and Rich Koster.

Our decision did not affect the concert in any way and allowed us to provide additional programming.

The Student Government Association, in conjunction with the University administration, has decided that the East Side concert, the Southwest concert and any other area concerts are to be eliminated.

I find it even more disturbing that the SGA is making SWAG out to be the bad guys when it is they who are trying to cut the concert fund from $50,000 to $25,000.

It is SWAG who is leading the fight to save this fund.

I'm disgusted by the way SWAG has been treated this year and equally disgusted at student government in general on this campus.

SWAG was slandered in various ads as the unsupportive area government and announced at the concert as the "unnameable area government" who didn't support the concert, when we gave them $10,000.

SWAG has been fighting all year for student events, and we are outraged at the SGA for eliminating these activities.

Forbidden dance of men

For men, aerobics is the forbidden dance. To men, aerobics represents raw femininity. Taking a class is just as taboo as wearing dresses and high heels.

There is a social stigma against male dancers, period. Young Patrick Swayzes and Mikhail Baryshnikovs must face endless taunting from their peers. Boys who choose ballet or gymnastics over Little League baseball must either keep this hobby a secret or get beaten to a pulp at school recess.

Acacia Jaxx

According to Russ Kidd, director of General Physical Education, 1,280 UMass students are enrolled in more than 70 aerobics classes. He had no statistics available as to how many of those 1,280 dancers were men, but pouring over the class rosters I counted 86 — or about 6.7 percent. There may be more in hiding since tricky names like Terry, Sandy and Kelly can go either way.

Although there are no male aerobics instructors now, Kidd said that that may soon change. "The guys just don't have enough experience, but nine years ago you'd hardly find any women in the weight room," he mused.

"We've come a long way. Today, half of my weight training instructors are women. I expect aerobics to go through the same metamorphosis."

Kidd said that men have slowly trickled onto the aerobics floor since he stopped calling the classes "Slimnastics," a name he says sounds too "wimpy and dancy" to men.

Carol Turner, who teaches aerobics three times a week at the Hampshire Fitness Club in Amherst, said she has never worked with a male instructor. "We've never had a man apply for the job," Turner explained. "It's not like we'd turn them away or anything."

Why the male fear of doing hip thrusts and knee lifts in public? Why don't they feel the same mad rush of adrenaline I do when I dance to Whitney Houston's "How Will I Know" or Neneh Cherry's "Buffalo Stance?"

I blame society.

Society teaches women to exercise so that they will look "good" in a bathing suit, while men sweat to have fun (to play football, basketball or baseball).

The gender-specific exercise clothing tells the story. Men wear baggy grey sweats. Women slip into shrink-wrapped plastic tights and leotards.

There have been efforts to "masculinize" aerobics. Diet King Richard Simmons tried and failed miserably. A T.V. workout called "Basic Training" tried placing tanks, battleships and helicopter gunships near the aerobic mats in an effort to attract the "Soldier of Fortune" crowd.

Yvette Disenta, an instructor at Aerobics Asylum in Northampton (a female-only club), said men feel "uncoordinated" doing choreographed dance routines. But every couple of months, Aerobics Asylum has a special "Men's Night" when women can bring their husbands or boyfriends in just for laughs.

Neither camouflage legwarmers or token promotions will boost male participation in the long run.

Aerobics classes must be altered slightly to take into consideration sensitive areas of the male anatomy. Men must feel at home on the aerobics mat.

I can only dream. Maybe someday fathers will encourage their sons to take up dancing instead of violent games like hockey. Maybe someday fathers will teach their sons how to break in their aerobic suits instead of breaking other kids' arms and legs.

A dynamic year at UMass

Walking around the University of Massachusetts in my last 15 days here I am struck by the variety and the amount of choices I see on campus. This morning I got coffee at the student-owned People's Market, wandered over to visit the ducks, and tried to figure out what the weather would be like in two hours.

A couple of days ago there was a world-class concert on campus and two nights ago I went to see Ralph Nader speak at Bowker Auditorium. This university has a lot to offer its uniquely diverse student body. Its location in the Pioneer Valley, next to four other colleges, benefits everyone.

Brad Robertson

The Berkshires offer New England charm and the Pike leads to Boston with its rich history and incredibly active prescence, even if the Celtics are done for the summer. And I-91 takes you on your way to New York City and its frenetic pace. I could certainly continue the list.

As a University of Oregon student here for one year, I have made it a point to see and do as much as possible in this short time. It certainly has been interesting. This year the budget has rocked the campus. Indeed the whole state has felt a fiscal pinch. Beacon Hill has suffered the pressure of an angry commonwealth, and Boston has been hurt by its mishandling of the Stuart murder case and its continuing plague of racism.

UMass and Boston share much in common and are deeply affected by their proximity and the large number of transplanted Bostonians here in Amherst. Both are truly interesting places with much to offer any visitor, especially a tall one from the shores of the Pacific Ocean.

I wrote this little essay just to remind myself how dynamic this year has been. But I have to also counteract some of the pessimism that permeates many people's writing and thinking on campus.

While the budget and continuing social and racial problems will obviously continue (as they will just about everywhere), I hope people here realize the tremendous opportunities that exist in this area for learning and growing. Don't take it for granted.

There are some things here you see every day that you have to look pretty hard to find in other parts of the country. Those who pass up on their chances to see how different people live and think may well be missing out on the most important lesson college has to offer.

The chances are here, and I hope all UMass people will take advantage of their time. Undergraduate days disappear pretty fast. There's a lot here. Don't let apathy get in the way of your education. And to the people here at his fine institution — thanks for everything.

But I still hate the Celtics.

■ Muldoon

"In a way, I hope I can't be described because I don't want to be doing something that I've done before," he said. "I would not want a piece to be known as a typical Paul Muldoon poem."

O'Brien said Muldoon has broken ground in Irish poetry.

"He has expanded margins of what it's permissible to do," she said. "He has very successfully walked the tightrope of an international poet and an Irish poet."

In the past three years, Muldoon has been a visiting professor at Princeton University, Columbia University and the University of California at Berkeley University as well as UMass. He will return to Princeton next fall.

Muldoon said he writes initially for himself, although he worried it may sound "a bit selfish."

"I don't have a particular audience in mind when I write," he said. "I'm just trying to make sense out of experience and find out what the poem has to say."

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Group activities will link you to compatible and helpful people today. Do not expect all promises to be kept, however. A distant place may be the setting for a meaningful new relationship.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Promoting teamwork on the career front should win you high marks today. Express your opinions clearly; your words will gain wide acceptance and rousing applause. Spend more time with children.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Combine logic with ingenuity to please a friend, advance a group's cause or negotiate an agreement. Get everything in writing. Private talks and teamwork give you the winning edge.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Certain investments look promising; do not put your money down now, however. Group participation is favored. People you meet while traveling brighten your outlook. Put small economies into practice.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Learn to ignore people who ask too many personal questions. Practice patience with close ties; trouble may be brewing. Let romance take care of itself. Joy will come if you lighten up.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Avoid taking risks today; your expectations could be too high. An impractical financial move could upset a relationship. Get in touch with your relatives; they have important news to share.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Seek experts' advice on a legal matter. The offers you receive now have real merit; look into them carefully before making a final decision. A close relationship responds to more pampering.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): People who have been at odds with you can be won over. A stranger or far-off acquaintance could breathe new life into a pet project. Pull out all the stops; big profits can be made.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Even if others act stubborn, put on a happy face! People with influence are willing to help you; do not hesitate to seek their support. Discuss risky ventures with perceptive friends.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Mutual arrangements could suffer unless you study them closely. Get in touch with experts who possess specialized knowledge. A long-distance call proves that your influence is spreading.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You get much closer to the truth when you heed your feelings instead of false logic. Avoid saying or doing anything that could get you into legal difficulties. You do not need enemies.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A good deed, past or present, may help you extricate yourself from a messy situation. A secret adventure takes an unexpected turn. A surprise legacy gives you cause for celebration.

ARTS & LIVING

Final words on gaining attention

By JON DRUKMAN
Collegian Correspondent

This is it. I'm graduating, so I'll no longer have the ability to reach out and influence the mass of students leading lives of quiet desperation. I just want to share with you (read: impose my opinions in a disquietingly intense way) what I've discovered about life and music in two years of being a Disc Junkie.

There are two ways to make people sit up and notice you. The first is to be incredibly obnoxious. Public Enemy, while being musical geniuses and all that, are in this category. However, they've managed to twist the media round their finger so that their public displays of controversy get them mostly positive results. Remember: if people are burning your records, they have to buy them first!

The second way of gaining attention is to be original. Most people prefer the notoriety approach, to the detriment of those of us who actually listen to the music. Personal gripes aside, it seems that most of the original ideas in music these days come from the fusion of two or more genres.

DISC JUNKIE

The new Depeche Mode single is a very catchy pop tune; stylistically like many of their older songs, and would probably be pretty good if they just played it on an acoustic piano with the group singing. But instead, they threw in a lot of ideas taken from house music. The result is completely addictive. Big Audio Dynamite did this a while ago with acid house, rap, reggae and pop. Pop Will Eat Itself's last album was a brilliant mix of heavy metal, hip hop, rap and pop. Foetus mixes jazz, hardcore and god only knows what else. The list goes on, and will hopefully burgeon even further in the future.

The latest trend to worry about is the independent labels being "bought out" by the majors. Nettwerk, a Canadian independent that was responsible for some terribly interesting music a few years ago, is now distributing all its works in America through IRS. This seems promising, but one can't help but wonder whether or not they might make a few concessions when signing new acts. For instance, The Aquanettas, who received a good slamming in this column a while back, are one of Nettwerk's latest signings. It is almost inconceivable that the label that promoted Skinny Puppy and Severed Heads signed a lame Bangles clone group, but it happened, and we are left to wonder why. The latest news is that SubPop, a Seattle label that I respect, even though I don't enjoy their type of music, has an exec who is highly placed at CBS. They reassured their followers that they wouldn't sell out, but do you believe it? Time will tell.

Finally, I must thank the arts editors for wanting a Disc Junkie in their pages. To everyone who read and commented on the column (you know who your are), thanks. To the person who listed me as "Worst Columnist" in last year's End Of The Decade Arts Survey, may your arms swell up and drop off. To everyone else, keep your mind and ears open! It isn't illegal, yet.

Gala celebration on Sunday

JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

"Celebrate 10 years of bringing you the newest and best of women's music and politically progressive culture," is the invitation for Sunday.

It is an opportunity for members of the community to join in a spirited musical send-off to this semester. Known around the Bay area for her talents with six- and twelve-stringed guitars and uniquely ballad/folk/gospel style songs, Melanie DeMore brings this to the days' activities.

Felice Yeskel, coordinator of the UMass Program for Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Concerns said the celebration is for Jenny Hines, who has been with the Program for ten years and for the fifth year anniversary of New Moon Productions. Both these groups, as well as UMass LBGA are sponsors for the event.

It is happening at the UMass Campus Center Auditorium at 7 p.m. Tickets are $8 to $12, $4 for UMass students, and are available at The Program for Gay, Lesbian and Bi-sexual concerns, Food For Thought Books and For the Record in Amherst and Broadside Books in Northampton.

Further information can be obtained at 545-4824 or 586-8718. The Auditorium, and its bathrooms are wheelchair accessible.

Minutewomen host A-10 tourney this weekend

"Not in the clamor of the crowded street, not in the shouts and plaudits of the throng, but in ourselves, are triumph and defeat."
The Poets

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Staff

I doubt if the poets had the University of Massachusetts softball team in mind as they inked those words into history. But they might just have well been custom-made for the reining A-10 champions. The Minutewomen have the ability to control their own destiny today at 3 pm. at Totman Field as they take on Penn State University in the first round of the A-10 tournament.

During the coarse of the season UMass has been their own best friend and their own worst enemy. At times they have played well enough to beat any team and at other times . . . .

Let's just say that this A-10 tournament is up for grabs.

The top four teams in the A-10 have traveled to Amherst to compete in this annual end-of-the-season ritual. Only Rutgers has a chance for a NCAA bid. They will have to win the tourney to go and there will be three teams trying to get in their way. They are:

UMass: The Minutewomen compiled a 25-20 record overall and 9-3 in the A-10. So far this season they have swept Temple, split with Rutgers and were swept by Penn State. During the mid-season UMass won 10 of 11 games including a dramatic extra-inning win over powerhouse UConn.

Offense: The Minutewomen are led offensively by Holly Aprile. One of the most aggressive competitors at UMass, Aprile led the Minutewomen in batting average (.412), slugging percentage (.595) and hits with 61, including seven triples.

Co-Captian Mary Duff ended her final regular season batting a career best .328. The speedy shortstop had a team-high 11 stolen bases.

Cherie DellAnno batted .290 and led the Minutewomen with 21 RBI's. DellAnno has also been successful in all nine stolen-base attempts.

Chris (Flush) Collins has improved at the plate to the tune of a .273 batting average and 19 RBI's.

Named A-10 Player-of-the-week earlier in the season, co-captain Jen Miller finished off the season with a .270 average, with 19 RBI's (including four game-winners).

After early-season troubles at the plate Sheri Kuchinskas began ripping the ball and finished the season with 16 RBI's and was nominated for A-10 Player-of-the-week.

Dawn Albert has proven to be a asset off the bench. With 6 hits in 16 at-bats, Albert provides much needed bench strength.

Defense: Aprile is the mainstay for the Minutewomen, that's no secret. Finishing the season with a 18-11 and a 1.93 ERA. What was not expected was the emergence of freshmen pitcher Darlene Claffey. Claffey filled the starting pitching position left open when Jen Devlin's season ended prematurely due to an injury. With a 7-5 record and a 1.91 ERA, Claffey has been able to give the sometimes overworked Aprile an occasional breather.

In the field, UMass ended the regular season with a .933 fielding percentage. The Minutewomen have the best catcher in the A-10 with DellAnno, and Duff is a solid shortstop.

With the season-ending injury to Bonnie Schilling, coach Elaine Sortino was forced to move Collins from third to first and put freshmen Laurie Dondarski at third. The move seems to have worked, mostly due to the hard work of the duo.

Dondarski was the key player in the triple play UMass turned against Adelphi Tuesday as she dove for a bunt attempt, catching it in the air, and threw from a kneeling position to Miller covering first for second out. Miller and centerfielder Kuchinskas combined for the third out with Kuchinskas covering the bag.

Penn State: The Lady Lions finished the regular season with a 24-20 overall record and a 8-4 record in the A-10. They have met UMass twice this season and beaten the Minutewomen both times, 3-0 and 4-3. Penn State hopes that it will be able to end the mini-slump that it found itself in at the end of the season, having lost their last three. Losing 6-0 to Kent State and then both games of a doubleheader to Adelphi, 1-0 and 7-1.

Offense: The big gun for Penn State is sophomore Joyce Tinner. Tinner leads the Lady Lions with a .350 avg. and 34 RBI's.

Co-Captain Mary Duff begins her final A-10 appearance against Penn State today at 3 p.m. on Totman Field.

After Tinner, Penn looks to Dena Tauriello. Tauriello batted .323 for the Lady Lions and chipped in with 14 RBI's.

Defense: Penn State's team ERA was 1.98 in the regular season and the breakdown of individual stats goes like this: Ellie Traino had a 1.17 ERA and a 3-3 record; Kim Corbin had the most wins for the squad with 10 and a 1.68 ERA.

Rutgers: Rutgers had the best record in the A-10 with a mark of 27-19-1 (11-1 in the A-10) and are the unofficial favorites in the tourney. UMass was the only A-10 team to beat the Lady Knights in the regular season.

Offense: Rutgers batted .245 as a team in the regular season and the batting order, while not blessed with power (no homers) did manage to pound out 54 extra base hits and stole 49 bases in 62 attempts.

Laurie McMahon led the Lady Knights with a .308 average and had 6 doubles and three triples in the regular season.

Linnette Lombana had the most RBI's for Rutgers with 25.

Temple: The Lady Owls scratched and clawed their way into the tourney with a 6-6 A-10 record and a 26-17 record overall. Temple's only win against teams in the tournament came in a 4-2 victory over Penn State early in the season. Temple won their last ten games of the regular season and should be confident.

Offense: Dionna Harris has been a one-woman wrecking crew for the Lady Owls. Leading the team in batting (.401), homers (6) and RBI's (26), Harris will be on the minds of the three other pitching staffs.

Temple also has the services of Denise Sarno who batted .303 with 20 ribbies.

The Lady Owls averages drop a lot after that, so if these two don't get the job done, it probably won't get done.

Defense: Pitching is the Lady Owls strong suit. Their 0.88 team ERA is the best in the tourney and a key member in that staff is Kathy McCarthy. McCarthy finished the season with a microscopic ERA of 0.44, allowing only 9 earned runs in over 142 innings pitched. She also had a team-leading 60 strikeouts.

The tournament starts tommorrow at 1 p.m. as Temple takes on Rutgers. All games are at Totman Field and the Championship game will be played at 1 p.m. Sunday.

I realize that Sunday is Mother's Day, so bring your mother to the game.

Because, in themselves, they just might find triumph.

Baseball turns first round in A-10 tournament

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Staff

All season, the University of Massachusetts baseball team has been inconsistent. The Minutemen have played some inspired baseball (take for example the weekend in Temple, or the game against Holy Cross), and some lacksluster ball (the games against Hartford, and UConn).

None of this really matters now. Tournament time has arrived.

No one really cares if the Minutemen were 3-5 on their Florida trip, or 15-4 at home, or whether they were thrashed by UConn, or whether they struggled at Rutgers, or whether they beat Temple four times and St. Joseph's four times. None of this matters now.

The Minutemen had one goal during the regular season, to make the Atlantic 10 Tournament (which they did). Today in Boyertown, Pa., the Minutemen face the Western Division Champions, George Washington University (13-3 in the A-10).

UMass enters the contest relatively healthy, Lou Olivieri returned to the lineup Tuesday after a knee injury, Rich Graham is back in the rotation as is Dan O'Leary, and even Jerry Creamer threw in the bullpen at Northeastern.

The Minutemen may not be playing their best baseball of the year, they are 6-4 in the last 10 games, but can anyone point out a time when the Minutemen were playing up to their potential, for more than just one or two games? Every now and then the Minutemen showed sparks of greatness, but as a team they have been unable to stay at such a level.

Senior leadership plays a large role in the tournament. The Minutemen are young, they have a pitching staff which is led by freshman Scott Meaney and sophomore Rich Graham. If the Minutemen play up to potential all weekend, they could find themselves in the College World Series at weekend's end.

What of the other three teams in the tournament?

Rutgers (14-2): Beat out UMass by two games for the Eastern Division title. Have a good hitting attack which is as good as any in this tournament. Are hitting .297 as a team, led by James Cann's .370 average. Do not run a lot, stole only 27 bases all year.

Rely on good, strong pitching from a veteran staff, and superb fielding. They rarely beat themselves with errors, so you have to play your best ball against them. Are 30-16 on the year.

Only consider the season to be a success if they win the A-10 tournament. Have to be the favorites to win it all, but can be beaten. Only losses in conference were to UMass and Rhode Island.

UMass sluggers will take a swing at George Washington today in Boyertown, Pa.

George Washington (13-3): Won the Western Division by one game over West Virginia. Not a lot of stars on this team. Leading hitter is Mike Welch (.316).

This team is fundamently sound, they love to run and have stolen 89 bases this year. Overall, this is a sub .500 team at 23-29, but when it comes to the A-10, this team seems to rise to the occasion.

Could cause some problems in the tournament, especially to UMass catchers, but look for the Minutemen to beat GW and Bill Anderson (5-4, 3.72 ERA) today.

West Virginia (12-4): Like Rutgers, they can hit the ball. The Mountaineers are hitting .297 as a team, but they also have two players, Ravi Shibley and Darrell Whitmore who each have eight homeruns. Patient hitting team which makes opposing pitchers throw strikes.

Tony Lehosit leads the pitching staff with a 7-2 record and a 2.76 ERA. Wes Shaw is 8-2 with a 3.79 ERA. Are 30-18 overall and with a good tournament from Shaw and Lehosit could easily win it all.

UMass (12-4): The Minutemen have been well documented. They are young but could win with a tremendous tournament. Drew Comeau (.378, 33 RBIs) has been immense all year, and would like nothing more than to cap his A-10 career by winning the tournament.

Meaney and Co. must come up with big pitching performances otherwise the Minutemen could find themselves on the down side of two straight blowouts. The Minutemen are the tournament's leading hitting team (.307) – Derek Dana and Glenn DiSarcina have been red hot.

Look for UMass coach Mike Stone's crew to come up with a good tournament. They may not beat Rutgers, but they should beat both George Washington and West Virginia.

AT STAKE: An automatic bid to the College World Series.

PREDICTION: All four of these teams could win it all, but Rutgers is the cream of the crop. Rutgers will go undefeated and beat UMass in the final game.

Out-of-state students deal with fee increases

By KENDRA PRATT
Collegian Staff

The $485 mid-semester increase for out-of-state students at the University of Massachusetts has forced some students to transfer or to drop out, while others worry if they will be able to afford to graduate unless they graduate earlier than anticipated.

One out-of-state student, who requested anonymity, said she got married two weeks ago to a Massachusetts resident so she could continue to attend UMass at in-state tuition rates.

"The only way to become a Massachusetts resident is to live in Massachusetts for one year without taking classes or to get married to a Massachusetts resident," she said. "The person I married is very kind. If this situation weren't happening, we wouldn't be married."

Tonya Muro, a transfer student from Illinois, said she decided to come to UMass because it was an inexpensive school known for its diversity. She said the option of transferring again would be "detrimental" to her education because she would lose credits and would have to be in school longer.

"I really don't want to transfer as a junior," she said. "You set your goals and map out your life and then you have to start all over again.

"These increases are going to discourage the majority of out-of-state students," she said. "I've had such a diverse experience here. It's a shame."

A student from New York, Katie Donahue, said her mother spends her entire salary to keep her children in college. Hoping to graduate early, Donahue took 19 credits this semester.

She said she would return to a New York State College but prefers the diversity of UMass. She added that New York is also cutting "what little they have" in their educational programs.

Donahue said: "People ask, 'Why don't you transfer and go to your own state school?' Maybe these schools don't have my program. You don't get everything in one place in New York like you do here."

Polly Parker, a first semester junior from Missouri, said she returned home last year to support her family since her father was terminally ill with cancer. She was not considered financially dependent since she lived with her parents, she said. Her income for that year was considered to be money saved for school by the UMass Financial Aid office, but she said her income went to support her family.

"I've waited too long to get through school so I'm not going to stop now," she said. "The University should re-evaluate my financial situation if they're going to raise tuition in the middle of the year."

One student from Vermont, Kati Pinder, is dropping out of school for the next year, hoping to save enough money to be able to eventually return. She said she was trying to save money this semester by working 25 hours a week, but the money she made this semester will pay for the unexpected increase.

Pinder said she "loaded up" on credits to try to graduate early. "How much can you learn if you are taking all those credits?" she asked.

Celeste Krochak, an undergraduate from New York, said she also is trying to load up on credits in order to graduate a semester early. She said she would prefer not transferring to avoid adjusting to a new university.

Gwenn Moreale, a New York resident, has decided to transfer to State University of New York because of increased costs at UMass. "I'll probably lose credits so in the long run it will probably cost more. I might have to be in school for an extra semester or year.

"After spending so much time adjusting to going away to school, I couldn't handle transferring again," she added.

Kari Coleman from New York transferred to UMass after two years at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute.

Saying that over half of the UMass courses were taken to fulfill general education requirements, Coleman said she would have to fulfill the new requirements and end up being in school "forever."

"UMass is not for us [out-of-state students], it's for Massachusetts residents," she said. "By turning away out-of-state students, you are decreasing the quality of the diverse experience at UMass."

Gorillas land NCAA playoff berth

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

A little more than two weeks ago, the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team decided to make up its rained out game with Brown University.

But the decision didn't come without a heavy price. The scheduling switch forced the Gorillas to give up their final home date of the season against Boston College as part of the agreement.

Or so everyone thought. Seeing as how Brown was responsible for all this, it only seems appropriate that the Bruins have to return the favor.

UMass, to the surprise of most everyone, will get one last home game. The Gorillas are seeded eighth in the NCAA Tournament and will host ninth seed Brown in the first round Wednesday afternoon.

The time of the game and the exact site will not be determined until sometime this morning. The NCAA usually frowns upon playing such big games at The Hill, but the grass has not been greener at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium this spring. A severe case of winter kill rendered the McGuirk turf useless.

So whether it's The Hill, The Pond, Haigis Mall or E Lot, the good news is that

Tour de Trump ends in Boston

BOSTON (AP) – Raul Alcala of Mexico concluded 11 days of consistent and strategic racing by winning the overall title of the Tour de Trump bicycle race by 43 seconds yesterday.

Michael Zanoli, a native of the Netherlands who now lives in Boulder, Colo., outsprinted East Germany's Olaf Ludwig by a bike length for his second victory in the 13th and final stage, which began in Northampton, of the 1,107 mile event. The last leg of the race was completed in 4 hours, 20 minutes, 55 seconds. Davis Phinney of Boulder, Colo., was third in the same time as the winner.

Alcala, 26, of Monterrey, Mexico, began his quest after winning the prologue on May 3 the opener of the event that wound through six states. He finished 15th in Sunday's stage as part of a large pack of riders that included his closest pursuers and eventual second-place finisher Atle Kvalsvoll of Norway, who placed 35th yesterday.

Murphy starts to get tough

By EVE EPSTEIN Associated Press Writer

BROOKLINE — Evelyn Murphy's male political consultant has just referred to somebody as the daughter of an ambassador and the comment doesn't sit well with the first woman to win statewide office in Massachusetts history.

She leans over and gives Michael Goldman a punch — just a small, playful punch — but a gesture that is as quietly insistent as the gubernatorial candidate herself. "Don't do that to her, Michael," the lieutenant governor tells one of her top campaigners.

For a woman who has called herself shy, who has carefully polished her image throughout years in front of the camera, who has a reputation for being about as stiff as the man she hopes to follow into the governors's office, the nudge seems uncharacteristically spontaneous.

But nobody can say the lieutenant governor ever pulled her punches when it came to women's issues. She has always been outspoken in her support for abortion rights, child care and education.

The problem, her critics say, is that she failed to hit hard enough in the last months of the Dukakis presidential campaign when the state's budget began to unravel. In this election year, those too closely associated with the unpopular outgoing governor are paying a price. Murphy has found herself in the dreaded "inside candidate" pool in a year when most candidates are calling themselves Beacon Hill outsiders.

Murphy defended her budget record at a small, working class diner in her hometown of Brookline, better known for its upscale restaurants and wealthy residents. As the Busy Bee, most of the patrons this morning are reading the Boston Herald — a newspaper Murphy has sparred with in the course of the campaign.

One Herald reader wishes her good luck before leaving. But another, who has read the morning headlines touting a poll that show Democrat John Silber pushing ahead in the governors' race, starts telling everybody in a loud voice Silber is the man for him.

"Thanks pal," Murphy mumbles under her breath. But she continues, undaunted, to defend her record in the state's fiscal mess.

Murphy insists that she began to warn of problems with the budget in 1988, while Gov. Michael S. Dukakis was still on the campaign trail. And she points out that early this year, while other Democrats were still hedging on their plans to clean up the fiscal mess, she offered a detailed plan for cuts and taxes.

Shortly after Murphy released her plan in February, she took credit for breaking the legislative logjam on the budget. Murphy later conceded her plan failed to get the logs moving, as the budget deficit continued to grow to $1 billion with no movement in sight.

"So what," Murphy said, when asked about her logjam comment. "You know? So what."

The important thing, she said, was that she took a stand. The other candidates — and mainly former Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti — have reaped the rewards of silence on taxes, Murphy said.

Murphy wasn't necessarily thinking about the tricky politics of taxes when she decided to get an undergraduate degree in math and a Ph.d in economics from Duke University. She was being practical.

Murphy's father, a career army officer, suffered a severe heart attack when she was 13. The heart attack forced his retirement — and shocked his youngest daughter into the realization she would always have to be self-reliant.

That doesn't mean Murphy's parents were comfortable with her choices in life. Her father was ambivalent about her career, and her mother used to discourage her from staying in politics.

"Part of him wants to see me succeed and another part of him wants to see me settle down and get married and have a family," said Murphy, who is single. "That's his notion of a more secure life."

A self-proclaimed liberal, Murphy, who turns 50 this month, also said she broke with her parents political views. "I've always been independent. I was independent as a kid. Growing up, I did what I wanted to do."

In the 1960s and early 1970s, Murphy helped start companies that specialized in development and technological innovation. She was appointed secretary of environmental affairs by Dukakis in 1975. After losing in her first attempt to become lieutenant governor in 1982, Dukakis named her secretary of environmental affairs.

Statehouse to debate Medicaid

BOSTON (AP) — The Medicaid program and health insurance costs are draining government resources, and the issue promises to dominate debate on the 1991 budget in the House this week, said a legislative report to be released today.

"State government is not in control of our health system's costs," the House Ways and Means Committee has concluded in a report on Medicaid. "We believe instead that health costs are controlling state government to the detriment of all other vital ?Ways and Means Chairman Richard A. Voke, D-Chelsea, and his committee members have proposed a lengthy list of spending cuts and other measures adding up to a $332 million reduction in the projected growth of Medicaid. Medicaid costs are expected to increase by one-third to a projected $2.8 billion.

"At some point, Medicaid just consumes the entire state budget," said Steve Triangle, a member of a group of private-sector health care specialists convened by Voke.

Rep. John McDonough, D-Jamaica Plain, a Ways and Means committee member who advocates curbing the growth in health expenses, said limiting Medicaid costs would require extensive reorganization of the Massachusetts health administration.

Police nab Deer Island prison escapees

REVERE (AP) — State and local police captured three escapees from the Deer Island House of Correction early yesterday, but not before the inmates slashed tires and broke windshields of some 30 cars, authorities said.

Two police officers found Lawrence McFarland, Patrick O'Shea and Daniel Bowden hiding in a cave amidst the breakers at the end of Winthrop Beach shortly after the rampage, said Metropolitan District Police Sergeant William McKay.

McKay said the trio, who include a convicted burglar, tried unsuccessfully to steal a car before vandalizing about 30 vehicles.

"We're dealing with a group of real intellectuals," McKay said. "They made a happy Mother's Day for a lot of upset people."

The three, all from Boston, had escaped from the jail Saturday shortly before the 4 p.m. head count.

Penal officials said McFarland, 30, was serving time for committing a larceny over $100, and for receiving stolen property, while O'Shea, 18, was convicted of receiving a stolen motor vehicle. Bowden, 19, was convicted of assault with a dangerous weapon and entering in the night with intent to commit a felony.

McKay said the three face charges in connection with 30 counts of malicious destruction of the cars. They were returned to Deer Island yesterday, he said.

Fireworks thought to be cause of smoke

HELPING SOMEONE IN DISTRESS

Responding to another person who is hurting emotionally is a fundamental human activity.
There may be times when someone you know will display signs and symptoms of emotional distress.

WHAT IS EMOTIONAL DISTRESS?

Distress is a continuum of emotions from a little down or upset or anxious to very depressed or grief-stricken. Distress can be anticipated at times of transition and change such as graduation, marriage, divorce, moving, leaving home. Distress will also be experienced when someone deals with ongoing, complex problems such as chronic illness, or an addiction, or serious financial difficulties.

HOW DO I KNOW SOMEONE IS EXPERIENCING EMOTIONAL DISTRESS?

There are a wide range of behaviors that signal distress. Some common ones are:

Noticeable changes in work or study performance
-Poorly prepared work
-Lateness or absenteeism
-Procrastination
Changes in general behavior
-Unable to focus or concentrate
-Agitated or bizarre behavior
-Increased lethargy
-Inability to make decisions
-Change in personal hygiene
-Abuse of alcohol/drugs
-Incoherent speech
-Eating too much or too little
-Sleeping too much or too little Acting emotionally out of control
-Inappropriate anger, fear, or irritability
-Excessive, prolonged, or inappropriate crying
-Making verbal or physical threats to others
Talking about suicide
-This may range from vague references such as "Life's a drag. Why do I bother?" to more specific statements such as, "I want to die." or "Maybe I'll just do myself in and end it all."

HOW CAN I HELP?

It's normal to feel scared and overwhelmed by another person's emotional distress. Sometimes it helps to take a couple of mental steps back and remember a time when you experienced distress. What helped? Did you talk with a friend? What did your friend do that helped or didn't help?

Perhaps the friend suggested you talk with a professional. It's important to know when to say, "I don't have the expertise to help you with this but I can help you find someone who does."

Some things you can do to help someone in distress include:

Provide safety
Find a quiet, comfortable place to talk. Offer reassurance but DO NOT make promises you can't keep, such as guaranteed confidentiality if you don't know what is involved.

Establish rapport
Look and act attentive. Make eye contact. Use words that show you accept the person and want to help them, for example, "It seems like you've been having a hard time-I'd like to hear about it." DO NOT say "I know how you feel." You aren't that person and don't know how they feel.

Listen carefully
Ask questions, repeat in your own words what the other person just said. Listening gives the person in distress a chance to air feelings and gives you a chance to help identify what events are contributing to the distress.

Discuss alternatives
People in distress often feel trapped. You can help them think about their situation in new ways and help them take steps toward resolving their difficulties. These options can develop from them, from your asking them problem-solving questions, or from you. Don't leave the conversation without a next step you both agree on. This might be another meeting with you or a referral.

Always refer:
-suicidal or assualtive talk or gestures
-prolonged depression
-extreme or prolonged behavior change
-If in doubt, talk with a mental health professional yourself to assess the severity of the situation and get suggestions for referral.

How to refer:
-Identify resources on campus that will help resolve the problem.
-Provide a list of names and phone numbers.
-If the person is reluctant to call, sit with him/her while he/she calls.
-If the situation feels urgent, and the person is unable to call, make the call yourself.

IN AN EMERGENCY:

-Police: 5-3111

-University Health Services: 549-2671

-Mental Health Services provide on-call emergency services 24 hours a day. Weekdays 8am-5pm, call 545-2337. Afterhours and on weekends call 549-2671 and ask to speak to the Mental Health on-call clinician. If necessary, accompany the distressed person to meet with the on-call clinician.

-Rape Crisis Line: 5-0800

Recognizing the roots of sexism

Sexism has become a way of life for many women and men. It is so inherent in ourselves that we often fail to recognize that it exists.

Some women do not even realize that they are victims of sexism. We live in a world which devalues and hides women from their true potential. Identities are difficult to develop when we are constantly having our roles defined to us by the media, culture and family.

Minu Sebastian

To begin to rise up against this, women and men need to understand where they came from. We must go back to our family roots and realize what values we were raised with. What can be most difficult is recognizing sexism in our own family.

Being raised by Indian parents is a struggle I have contended with since I hit puberty. Part of the problem was I did not understand what I was up against. All I knew was that I was not treated as an individual who has the ability and intelligence to make decisions for herself. I was not accepted for the ideas or independence I sought.

I always assumed the issue was cultural differences, because my parents were raised in a culture much different than the culture here. But it was much deeper than an issue of culture. It was a value system and an ideology that I needed to recognize.

I always thought that it was natural that I could not get along with my parents. Everyone went through it, and I assumed that when I came to college my problems would be over. I would finally be free.

I was so wrong.

Entering college was the first step in a long struggle to regain my self-confidence, self-respect and independence. It wasn't enough being away from my parents because everything I grew up with came with me when I came to college. It started out being that I could not stand going home or talking to my parents. While a lot of first-year students long to go home because they miss the security of home life, I felt sick to my stomach when I thought of having to live at home.

Returning home meant giving up control over my life and giving it back to my parents who have continually tried to dictate what is best for me. It meant giving up a sense of myself and accepting my inferior role as an individual.

For a while I thought that if I only interacted with them on rare occasions I would be okay. I have come to realize that avoiding my parents was not enough for me to regain my sense of self.

I needed to understand that one of the reasons I have always been apprehensive was because they taught me to be inferior. I have, along with many other Indian friends, struggled against the dynamics that exist in many Indian households.

Traditional Indian fathers tend to have relationships by controlling their children. They stifle their children from growing into open-minded and independent people. They think that their children have no respect for them when in reality they have no respect for any point of view which differs from their own.

The relationship of a traditional Indian mother with the father is on the same level. The male has authority and control over his spouse. Unfortunately, many Indian women find themselves trapped and unable to break free from the control of their husbands. They usually deny that there is anything intrinsically wrong in their relationship. As a result, Indian mothers cannot give their children the support and encouragement they need.

Sexism is a hard thing to face up to in ourselves and other people. We are all brought up to accept and live how our parents taught us. Unconsciously, we accept and lead our lives with the values with which we were raised.

It's time to wake up and recognize that sexism is inherent in the very institutions we trust most, our family and ourselves.

Newman Center's Father Quigley inspirational

I am a graduating senior about to enter the "real" world in a few short weeks. As I ponder the past four years, I realize that I can't leave without thanking a very important member of this University, Father Joe Quigley.

Fr. Quigley probably only knows me by sight, and I can't say I've ever had an extended conversation with him, but he has managed to be a part of my life throughout my college years.

The Newman Center is open to all students to study, eat or just hang out. Anyone who's been there has probably seen Fr. Quigley walking around saying a cherry "hello" to passers-by.

Through his jovial attitude as well as his humorous, yet meaningful, church sermons, he has helped cheer me up during common college stress periods such as midterms and finals. He constantly tells students how proud he is that we are hanging in there and comforts those who are feeling depressed.

In fact, during my freshman year, a friend of mine was struggling with bouts of homesickness. On my way to church, I casually asked her if she'd like to come along. It just so happened that during that day's sermon, Fr. Quigley discussed how difficult it was to be away from home for the first time. His empathy and encouragement helped keep my friend going.

The Newman Center as a whole has provided students with a family-like community. I just want to say thank you to Fr. Quigley and the Newman Center. Thanks for your never-ending dedication to the students and the western Massachusetts community. Your efforts are appreciated by many.

Contributions of Greek organizations overlooked

There is a tendency to condemn organizations of which one knows little about. The 1,500 members of UMass fraternities and sororities did not join for primarily social reasons.

Fraternities and sororities, which have existed for more than a century, offer unique opportunities to men and women for living-learning experiences that enhance their formal education.

Membership, which begins during the college years, extends throughout the person's life. This develops the personality through supportive friendships, leadership development, scholastic achievement and commitment to service.

UMass Greeks have contributed more than 5,000 service hours to national and local philanthropies this semester, contributing and raising more than $150,000 for such causes.

Greek organizations are possibly the most diverse organizations on campus. Members come from many different races, religions, and socio-economic backgrounds.

The Greek area is for everyone. There are no prerequisites for membership. You can be you and be accepted. We are proud of our diversity, and we are loyal and supportive of each other.

As a sorority woman, I am thankful for the fraternity men who have walked me home from the library late at night, helped me study for exams, and been my friends for the past three years.

I don't have to go to Princeton to find a man of moral integrity when I have fraternity friends of this calibre who live next door.

Anti-Semites illegitimize Israel

After the Palestinian uprising broke out in the West Bank and Gaza Strip in the winter of 1987, it became fashionable to equate the Israeli army with the Nazis. The proponents of this analogy ignored differences between rubber bullets and gas chambers and dismissed the fact that Israelis were trying to curb street riots whereas Nazis exterminated six million people for being Jewish.

Julia Serebrinsky

Anti-Semites have always been rather hasty in search for potent metaphors of brutality and injustice with which they could associate Israel. A new metaphor has been found at the University of Massachusetts by several students who have undertaken the task of proclaiming and implementing their own foreign policy by declaring Israel to be an Apartheid state.

If comparison to Nazis was offensive, comparison to South Africa is bewildering. It is not clear what is being condemned more ferociously, Israel's domestic policy or its relations with South Africa. If it is the former, the Apartheid theory does not hold. In Israel, a Jewish majority shares equal rights with the Arab minority, in theory and in practice, even though this fact makes anti-Semites foam at the mouth.

Singling out Israel in condemnation of its diplomatic and trade relations with South Africa is intentionally misleading. Israel is one of many countries, including those in Europe, Middle East and Africa, which have economic ties to South Africa.

France, Great Britain and Italy, to name some, are the largest exporters of arms to South Africa. JORDAN sells it surface-to-surface missiles, and the Arab members of OPEC supply the Apartheid state with its oil.

Strangely enough, no one at UMass has stuck an Apartheid badge on all these countries. Likewise, no Arab nation was ever condemned for its role in the displacement of Palestinians in West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Today, there would have been a Palestinian state had other Arabs accepted the 1947 United Nations resolution which called for its creation alongside the Jewish state. Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza would not be under Israeli military occupation had Arab states recognized Israel's right to exist and not waged six unsuccessful wars to live up to the promise of pushing Jews into the sea.

If Palestinians are victims of Apartheid, it was imposed on them by their Arab brethren, not the Jews. The prolonged confinement of Palestinians in the refugee camps, which some consider to be analogous to Black townships in South Africa, is being falsely attributed to Israel. It is the refusal of Arab states to assimilate those refugees that kept them for generations in the squalor and misery of camps, breeding hatred for Israel and arificially evoking sympathy in world opinion.

Arab countries intentionally prolonged hardships of the Palestinian refugees by refusing to grant them acceptance and citizenship. During Nasser's rule, Egypt contained Palestinians in Gaza Strip, keeping them under strict curfews and barring them from entering the country.

Libya openly refused to grant Palestinians citizenship. In the 1970s and 1980's, Saudi Arabia preferred to employ South Koreans rather than Palestinians to alleviate its manpower shortages.

Arab states have done virtually nothing to ameliorate the lives of the refugees leaving that task to the United Nations Relief and Works agency, to which Israel over the years contributed more money than the oil-rich countries of Saudi Arabia and Kuwait.

Pointing finger at Israelis instead of Arabs for shaping Palestinians' destiny is gross, hypocritical and cowardly. It purposely diverts attention from the role of Arab states which used them as pawns in the larger game aimed at eliminating Israel.

Accusing Israel of being an Apartheid state is another subtle attempt by anti-Semites to illegitimize Israel's existence after years of wars and terrorism failed to destroy it.

Work together to unite Latinos

I read the article, "The Conquistadorean lineage divides Latinos" (Tomas Garcia, May 9), with misfeelings and sadness. It is sad to read an article that reflects hatred and portrays a lousy image of the Latinos at this institution.

By calling our brothers and sisters from another culture "gringos" Garcia portrays the same racism that we all want to eliminate. He also portrayed and singled out some Latinos at the University, especially those who speak Spanish and dance merengue and salsa. "La salsa, and merengue"are very much part of our African heritage and we all feel very proud of it.

Perhaps there is a lack of unity among Latinos here, but that is an universal phenomenon that exists everywhere and in many countries. Remember we are also here with a mission and goals as students, and unfortunately we do not have the spare time to help everyone get involved.

The Ahora Executive Board encourages Latinos at this institution to make a little time and get involved with the only Latin American organization on this campus. We believe that if everyone puts a little time, gets involved, and works together we will find out that we all have something in common, our rich culture and our heritage.

It is time to work together and stop attacking each other and our American friends.

Department deplores disruption

The Psychology Department is deeply concerned about the nature of the disruption of Professor Keene's class on April 24. This, and other recent incidents, violate members of our community and assault our tradition of free inquiry.

We deplore and condemn acts of intimidation, force and terror towards people who are gay, lesbian, bisexual, or indeed, of any group.

People who engage in acts of aggression should be removed from the community, and all efforts at criminal prosecution and civil redress should be undertaken.

As community members, we support the right of all people to pursue and enjoy a fulfilling style of life. No one may deny, disrupt or otherwise interfere with the peaceful pursuit of an individual's beliefs and dreams.

As psychologists, we will discuss with the community what we know about such acts of terrorism and how they can be stopped.

We stand with the gay, lesbian and bisexual members of our community as well as any group subject to persecution.

We look towards, and will actively work for, a future free of the violence, hatred and moral turpitude which has recently hurt our community.

Soul of 'Picture Book Wars' creates success

By JOSH GALITSKY

Picture Book Wars
Rand Theater
Thursday May 10

REVIEW

If a picture is worth a thousand words, then surely a play is worth one million. And if that story is told with true passion, it remains in the heart and mind like a cherished photograph.

But when a play reaches into its own soul and pulls out magic for the world to see, there are no words to speak of, only silent, profound inspiration.

I am still in awe after witnessing the wonder of Picture- Book Wars. It is everything drama should be; soul-searching, poetic, humorous, and haunting, rivoting and stylish. And driven — so incredibly driven!

The combination of factors that make Picture-Book Wars such a forceful, energetic play are so numerous, I can only hope to scratch the surface. Let us begin at the beginning.

Dudley Stone, a UMass graduate student, composed a magnificent script that rages with psychological fury, hypnotizes with dark obsession, and entertains with blood-drenched, dripping reality. The people are honest and alive and the gripping plot leads the audience on a fiery, terrifying journey through the human psyche. Peppering his work with quiet humor, Stone creates something that is without question, a sheer delight to behold.

Director Richard Trousdell guides the work with a seemingly flawless hand, pacing all twists and turns perfectly, and demanding deep, intensely rich characterizations from his actors. The action remained plentiful and powerful and never a lull interfered in the transitions from present to past and back again.

A honorable mention of the highest degree has to go to the lighting designer David Pesta who created nostalgic, often ghostly mood and atmosphere. Some of Pesta's outstanding techniques and skill included a subtle darkroom lighting effect and the transformation of a fluffy round chair into a wartime campfire.

Space denies mention to all the amazing acting performances because there were so many. Just some that stood out were Holly O'Neall Waite as Julia Brady who showed amazing range of emotion, Jocelyn A.E. Leary who was quirky and charming as Sally, and Ian Wedegartner who gripped my heartstrings as the naive Union soldier, Bluecoat.

There were two performances that scrawled their imprint on the UMass theater department photo album forever. That was David Watson as Edgar Allan Poe and Paul Couzyn as Mathew B. Brady.

David Watson's sheer presence on stage was the most stirring, compelling acting I have seen in a long time. His physical gestures, meticulous movements, and overall exciting style were fascinating, explosive, and evilly enchanting. Watson's incredible performance was characterization at it's very finest.

Paul Couzyn was star material, breathing life into the polished script by switching from the past to the present with ease, humor and poise. Couzyn changed voices and physical traits, aged and grew young again, and commanded his character with flare, charisma and unlimited charm. As Brady, Couzyn showed a range that convinced me he could do just about anything on stage.

If photography produces images on a surface by the action of light then Picture-Book Wars produces images on a surface by the acting and light.

Photography is an art. And Picture-Book Wars is indeed a work of art.

Natalie Cole hits Valley

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

Good to be Back.

Natalie Cole's latest album seems to express this singer's pleasure and newfound confidence at her re-establishment in the music world.

It began in the Spring of 1988 with her EMI debut LP Everlasting and her top ten crossover hit "Pink Cadillac," (originally done by Bruce Springsteen). "Jumpstart," "I Live for Your Love" scored hits for her and "When I Fall in Love," earned certified Gold-plus status. Everlasting was generating the exact formula of success and recognition that Cole had experienced in the past, and seemed bound for again.

"Miss You Like Crazy," the first single from Good to Be Back, captures the range and vivacity of Cole's voice. She explains the album as sophisticated. "This is an album for people who want to listen. It's a hipper album . . . It takes more chances."

Cole actively solicits and adopts the material she wants to sing, carefully choosing her producer as well. It results in an album that moves ceaselessly across emotional and musical spectrums.

"I use different producers because there are so many different types of music in me that I want to explore," Cole explains.

Work on Good To Be Back began over a year ago with the initial sessions for "Miss You Like Crazy" and "Starting Over" with producer Michael Masser. Masser has produced for the likes of Whitney Houston and Dianna Ross. He is, according to Cole, "a perfectionist who demands serious chops. I learned a lot about the patience of craftsmanship from him."

As far as Cole is concerned, songs are the exacting basis in her albums. "They have to have credibility and substance. Uptempo songs can be more fun, incorporate the latest hip phrases, the new dance step, what radio likes these days, but ballads are different," she explains. "The emotion has to be concrete. I have to be able to envision myself singing a song and making it believable before I consider cutting it."

A UMass alumni and daughter of legendary Nat King Cole, she was raised in an environment where success was viewed as every-day-type-stuff. Her 1975 debut album Inseparable earned her Gold album and two Grammy Awards including Best New Artist.

In 1976 Natalie, turned Gold and was followed by "Unpredictable" and "Thankful" (1977), releases that went Platinum.

Cole won the NAACP Image Award for Best Female Artist and Soul Train's Best Single (Female) Award for "I Live For Your Love," from Everlasting.

Her marked return to the world of music last year and future plans are cause for celebration, which can be done at Pearl St. on May 17 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $15, the show is 21 and over. Info: 584-7771

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Break with tradition. Family members will applaud your choices. Artists, writers and composers have an especially rewarding day. Practice will hone your skills. A loan comes through in the nick of time.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You get the go-ahead to travel. A crisis involving career vs. personal needs can be averted. Offer a compromise. Friends rally around to help. A new love makes everything else seem unimportant.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Look your best if you leave the house. Mate or partner provides the motivation you need to seek a more satisfying lifestyle. Do not let someone who is selfish stifle your emotions.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your concern for a grown child is natural but should not be allowed to spoil the day. It may be time to cut the card. An heirloom surface in a strange place.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Keep to a schedule and your self-discipline will return. Catch up on paperwork and return telephone calls. Use any spare time to brush up on a technical subject. A romantic mistake can be rectified.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A missing item is found in an obvious place. A problem is not as large as it first appeared. Avoid becoming involved in disputes that do not directly affect you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your friends' encouragement helps you discover a special talent. The chaos at work can be sorted out if you pull back and get better organized. Revise your priorities. Romance could be frustrating.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Step back and try to figure out someone's motives. You may be missing something. Do not depend too heavily on sheer luck in business. Humor helps you cope with a delicate problem.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Use all your energy and talent to work toward a long-term goal. Check an inclination to go too far too fast. Take nothing for granted. Meet face-to-face with the authorities.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A job well done should be generously rewarded. Guard against sacrificing your ideals in order to promote material gains. Ambition is urging you on. The element of surprise is powerful. Use it wisely.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Personal research will help you develop a sound game plan. Heed the cautionary words of your partner. Do every task assigned to you. Avoid arguing with higher-ups and older family members.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Probe deeper to find out what has to be done. Pay closer attention to financial figures even when your mind is on other things. Do some shopping at lunchtime. Bargains abound!

BoSox fall, 8-4

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Lance Parrish homered, doubled and drove in three runs yesterday as the California Angels ended a four-game losing streak, beating the Boston Red Sox, 8-4.

The Angels, who had matched the worst start in team history at 11-20, won for just the second time in 11 games. Their eight runs and 12 hits were season highs.

Chuck Finley (5-2) gave up eight hits and four runs to improve to 4-0 at home. Finley struck out seven and left with one out in the eighth after Tom brunansky's first home run for the Red Sox.

Parrish, who had three hits, had a two-run double in the second inning against Eric Hetzel. Parrish opened the eighth with his fifth home run for an 8-4 lead.

Parrish singled, Jack Howell doubled and Donnie Hill hit an RBI single that pulled the Angels even at 3 in the fifth.

Dante Bichette opened the California sixth with a double off Dennis Lamp (0-1) and went to third on Wally Joyner's single. The Angels went on to load the bases and Howell's single made it 5-3.

■ Tour de Trump

"I came into the race only to train," said Alcala, a former soccer player who took up cycling at age 10. "But I won the prologue, so I knew there was a chance to win."

Erik Breukink of the Netherlands finished third overall, 1:44 behind Alcala. Soviet amateur Dmitri Zhdanov was fourth, 1:52 behind.

Steve Speaks of Longmont, Colo., was the highest North American finisher, placing sixth, 2:23 behind Alcala. Tour de France winner Greg LeMond, who was 18th yesterday, placed 78th among the 87 riders who completed the tour.

LeMond briefly held the lead yesterday with first year pro David Farmer of Philadelphia as the cyclists began the second of two 3.1-mile loops around downtown Boston. But the two leaders were caught by a massive pack that negotiated most of the remaining miles.

Alcala, who fours years ago won the now-defunct Coors International Bicycle Classic, the previous largest cycling race in the United States, is the only Mexican rider to win a stage of the Tour de France.

He earned $50,000 of the $300,000 purse, which he will share with six teammates.

Alcala also won the eighth stage and finished in the top six of four other stages. He took the lead after Saturday's 12th stage, a 123.7-mile push to Albany, N.Y., that included a 1,500-foot climb in Devil's Kitchen, the most difficult stretch of the event.

"It was a hard race. I never saw any flat roads, it was always up and down," said Alcala, who lives and trains eight months a year near Zurich, Switzerland.

B's seeking revenge against Oilers

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Bruins say revenge for being swept by Edmonton in the 1988 Stanley Cup finals isn't a major motivation in this year's rematch. But some Bruins can't shake the thought that it's payback time.

Boston had the NHL's best record and is better than it was two years ago, when the powerful Oilers captured their fourth NHL title in five years. The Bruins, who last won the Cup 18 years ago, no longer are just happy with the Wales Conference crown.

"We have a lot more confidence. We have done it all year long," left wing Randy Burridge said. "We were pretty satisfied two years ago. We're not satisfied now until we win" the championship.

To some Bruins, beating Edmonton would be especially satisfying. They'll get their chance starting tomorrow night when the best-of-seven final opens in Boston. Game 2 is set for Friday night at the Garden, where the Bruins have won their last eight games.

In 1988, the Oilers won the final series that actually went five games. A Boston Garden power failure with the scored 3-3 forced Game 4 to be replayed in its entirety in Edmonton.

"I guess it would be nice to play Edmonton again," Boston's Cam Neely said before the Oilers beat Chicago 8-4 Saturday night to win the Campbell Conference title, four games to two by winning the last three. "Revenge and all that. We're a better team now and we're hungrier. Edmonton would be better [to play] because they swept us."

Defenseman Garry Galley, who joined the Bruins as a free agent six weeks after the 1988 final ended, detects that feeling in other teammates.

"In the backs of their minds, a lot of guys are really looking forward to playing Edmonton," he said. "It's a chance for them to redeem themselves. They got swept the last time and, obviously, that hurts."

The Bruins have much more going for them than just the revenge factor.

They had the NHL's best defense in the regular season. They've won nine of their last 10 games, all with Andy Moog in the nets. Defenseman Ray Bourque is one of three NHL most valuable player candidates, and Neely is the second leading playoff scorer.

"It's going to be tough," Edmonton's first-year coach, John Muckler, said. The Bruins "check well and they pride themselves on being a defensive hockey club."

"They play good defense, but so does this hockey club," Edmonton goalie Bill Ranford, a former Bruin, said.

The Oilers also have Mark Messier, the only player with more points than Neely in this year's playoffs and one of Bourque's rivals for the MVP award. And they've come a long way from a slow start.

A 6-2 loss in Boston on Nov. 9 gave the Bruins the season series, 2-0-1, leaving Edmonton with a 5-8-4 record and tied for last place in the Smythe Division.

"Around December, they began to heat it up a lot and became more familiar with each other and with their coach," Boston coach Mike Milbury said. "They're a far different team" than they were six months ago and "so are we."

Both teams also have changed considerably since their last Cup meeting.

Wayne Gretzky, who had the winning goals in two of the four victories in the 1988 final, is with Los Angeles. Goalie Grant Fuhr, who played all the games in that series, is hurt. Ranford has been sharp in his place.

The Oilers are a more free-wheeling team of speedy skaters than any of the Bruins' other playoff opponents this year, and Boston must adjust. But compared to the more physical, more plodding crew of 1988, this year's Bruins "have better speed than we've had in a long time," Bourque said.

Edmonton, which had eight days without a game after sweeping Los Angeles in the second round, has a two-day break before the final.

"We benefitted from our layoff after the LA series," Muckler said. "We couldn't get our intensity in the first couple of games against Chicago, but I think the series turned around after we won the [fourth] game [in Chicago] and then won back in Edmonton" to take a 3-2 series lead.

Boston's last game was Wednesday night, when it completed a four-game sweep of Washington. Had the Campbell final gone seven games, the Bruins would have been forced to wait until Friday night for their next game.

Dash for Cash crowns eight winners

University of Massachusetts undergraduate "Mojo" Nixon won the 2.4-mile Dash for Cash road race yesterday afternoon.

Nixon was one of eight winners in various categories of the race, sponsored by the North Pleasant Social Club and the Delta Zeta sorority. Proceeds from the race will benefit the American Heart Association.

Michelle St. Laurent was the women's undergrad winner, followed by Kaylie Dudley.

In the graduate categories, Michael Slavin, Barry Braun and Bruce Valentine took the top three spots, while Anne Smith was the lone winner in the women's division.

Carl Tompkins was the top finisher in the Amherst resident division, followed by Jeff Webber and Scott Weiss. The lone's winner in the women's resident division was Jane Kent Braun.

Tracy Levy on the host Delta Zeta sorority took the Greek women's title, while David Keimach of Delta Upsilon was the men's winner.

The sponsors would like to thank Pinocchio's and Mike's Westview for their donations, and also Kentucky Fried Chicken, Pizza Hut, Animal City and Bananarama for their support.

ble, two RBI's and scored a run as the Minutewomen scratched their way to a 4-1 victory despite the fact that they had but five hits.

For many teams the title of co-champion might be good enough, maybe it will be good enough for Temple, but it is most assuredly not good enough for the Minutewomen.

This team wants it bad and should be given the opportunity to either win it or lose it.

To them, co-champions means nothing.

There's no joy in A-10 tourney for UMass

Rain forces softball cancellation; championship in limbo

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Staff

How could Mother Nature allow this to happen on Mother's Day?

In what could be the cruelest decision ever handed down by an Atlantic 10 Conference committee, the University of Massachusetts softball team may be forced to accept a co-champion status with Temple, a team that the Minutewomen have beaten in all three games the two teams have played so far this season.

After UMass beat Penn State on Friday 4-2 and Temple (the alleged co-champs) on Saturday 4-1, they seemed destined to be headed for their second straight A-10 Championship.

At that point all it would take for the Minutewomen to win it all was one game. They had not lost a game in the tournament so they would have to be beaten twice by a team that had failed to beat them in three previous meetings, Temple.

Then came the rain.

The championship game, scheduled for yesterday, was cancelled early in the day, leaving the final results of the tourney in the air.

"They're very upset." Minutewomen coach Elaine Sortino said of her players. "This is something that they've been working for 10 months for." UMass, throughout the course of the regular season, had its fill of rainouts, being underwater more often than Jacques Cousteau and the gang of the Calypso and it is a cruel irony that weather may play a major role in the championship.

As it currently stands, UMass and Temple share the co-champion status. There has been an offer made to Temple by UMass to play on Thursday, whether at Totman or a neutral site.

A reply is expected by today, and it appears that the decision will rest in the hands of Temple, which could not stay and play today because of final exams.

"I'm totally and completely frustrated," said Sortino. 'We were playing so well. I thought we would be playing [today]."

The Minutewomen dug down deep and came up with two solid efforts as the tournament started.

In Friday's game UMass played Penn State, a team that had beaten the Minutewomen twice in the regular season, and the Minutewomen won behind the steady pitching of Holly Aprile and the timely awakening of the bats.

Trailing Penn State 1-0 after five innings the Minutewomen jumped all over the Nittany Lions' starting pitcher, Kim Corbin in the top of the sixth and held on for a 4-2 win.

In that game Aprile pitched the complete game, allowing only four hits and striking out six. On the offensive side Cherie DellAnno had a run and two hits. Chris (Flush) Collins had a run, a hit and two RBIs and Aprile had the only extra-base hit of the game (a double), scored one run and had an RBI.

The sixth inning started as Donna Koczajowski came through with what might have been the biggest hit of the season, a pitch-hit single to start off the sixth.

"She started it. She made a big, big, big contribution." Sortino said.

Amy Cockley came back in to run for Koczajowski and scored when Aprile blasted a shot, into a 30 mile-per-hour wind, that hit the fence in the air, for a double. Singles by DellAnno, Collins and Miller and a sacrifice fly by Sherri Kuchinskas accounted for the final UMass runs.

In Saturday's game against Temple, the Lady Owls got on the board first in the first inning, but were held scoreless the rest of the way as Darlene Claffey pitched the complete game, allowing only three hits and no earned runs.

The top three batters for UMass were once again the big guns. Aprile had a triple and scored a run and DellAnno scored two runs and chipped in with a single. But the big stick belonged to Collins.

In three at-bats Collins had two hits, including a dou-

Baseball eliminated after losses to Rutgers, WVU

After a promising start, the University of Massachusetts baseball team was knocked out of the Atlantic 10 Conference baseball tournament with a pair of losses Saturday.

The most difficult loss came in the second game of the tournament, with UMass playing Eastern Division champion Rutgers. The Minutemen held a 3-0 lead entering the ninth inning of the game behind the superior pitching of sophomore righthander Rich Graham.

But the Scarlet Knights erupted for three runs in the ninth to tie the game. The see-saw affair then dragged out until the 14th inning when Rutgers finally prevailed for an 8-7 win.

Forced into the loser's bracket, UMass was then eliminated after a 9-1 loss to West Virginia.

The Minutemen got off to a strong start Friday night, pounding Western Division champ George Washington, 13-0.

Freshman lefthander Scott Meaney cruised on the mound for UMass in picking up the complete-game shutout.

UMass athletes gain Atlantic 10 honors

Several University of Massachusetts athletes were named to the Atlantic 10 Conference All-Star teams in their respective sports.

Sophomore Holly Aprile was honored as A-10 Player-of-the-Year in softball, and was also named All A-10 utility player. Sheri Kuchinskas was Freshman-of-the-Year while senior Mary Duff was All-Conference at shortstop.

In baseball, sophomore Derek Dana was First Team A-10 at catcher, while junior third baseman Ian Torres, sophomore right fielder Brian Bright and sophomore shortstop Glenn DiSarcina made the second team.

No place like home: Gorillas host Brown

UMass won't be going to Baltimore, Cambridge, Princeton, N.J. or anywhere else.

"We're playing. That's all that matters," said UMass coach Dick Garber.

Garber was part of a telephone conference call yesterday morning of the NCAA Advisory Committee, a group of 10 coaches who made recommendations to the Tournament Selection Committee. He said that committee had UMass unanimously rated seventh.

But when the official announcement was made yesterday afternoon Johns Hopkins, ranked 10th by the Advisory Committee, was in the seventh spot, bumping UM to eighth.

"It's interesting that the committee moved [Hopkins] from 10th to seventh," Garber said. "I guess that's a reflection of the Southern influence."

According to Gene Corrigan, Tournament Committee chairman, it was a tough decision seeding the seventh through 11th teams.

"These were the hardest seedings we've had," Corrigan said. "The difference on paper between Johns Hopkins, [UMass], Brown, Princeton and Rutgers was very little."

Princeton was seeded 10th and Rutgers 11th. Princeton was figured to be a lock for seventh in the tourney until losing to Hofstra on Saturday, 7-6. Had that not happened, UMass would have been ninth and playing on the road rather than in Amherst.

As for seeding UMass and Brown, both finished with 10-4 records. But according to Corrigan, the fact that UMass beat Brown (21-18 on May 2) and that the Bruins had dropped their last two games, helped shape the decision.

So for the second time this month, UMass and Brown will square off. In the last meeting, the Gorillas came out firing and got Garber his 300th career coaching victory.

"That's a helluva matchup," Garber said. "We would have liked to play Hopkins, but Brown is a great matchup in New England."

There was minimal debate regarding the top six seeds, according to Corrigan. Syracuse and Yale were unanimously ranked 1-2, respectively. The biggest discussion was for the third seed, with Loyola (Md.) getting the nod over No. 4 North Carolina because of a head-to-head win over the Tarheels.

Harvard is ranked fifth and Virginia sixth. Rounding out the field is token Western entry Notre Dame at No. 12.

Getting squeezed out were Towson State and Navy. Although Towson's 12-2 record was better than anyone except Syracuse and Yale, the strength of schedule played a big role, as it did in all of the seedings.

"We had everyone's schedules in front of us, and everyone's records against teams in the Top 10 and Top 20," Corrigan said. "Then we looked at records vs. the Top 4, Top 6, against each other, and strength of schedule. We tried to look at everything we possibly could."

Corrigan said that Towson's weak schedule hurt its chances, and that a loss to Hopkins was the final straw.

"It was a tough call. Last year Towson played its way into the tournament [by beating then-No. 1 Hopkins in double overtime]," Corrigan said. "This year, because of their schedule, they needed a win over Johns Hopkins."

As for Navy, losses to Princeton and Rutgers killed the chances for the Midshipmen.

One other question was regarding Rutgers possibly getting in because it is hosting the Final Four. But Corrigan said that was never considered and that the Scarlet Knights were included on their own merit.

In other opening round matchups, Harvard hosts Notre Dame, Rutgers is at Virginia and Princeton at Hopkins. The UMass-Brown winner gets to travel to Syracuse next Sunday in the quarterfinals.

Gorilla Grumblings: This will be the third straight season UMass gets a home game in the first round. It is also the third consecutive time that UMass gets a first round rematch. Cornell visited Amherst each of the last two seasons.

This is also the fourth straight year UMass opens with an Ivy League opponent in the first round. In 1987, it was the infamous Penn comeback (UMass led 10-8 with 48 seconds left and lost in regulation, 11-10).

It's a silly scenario (which doesn't mean it couldn't happen), but if UMass were to reach the finals, it could wind up facing four teams that it has already played this year. Syracuse (23-9 loss on May 6) awaits in the quarterfinals, while it could conceivably play Harvard (18-15 loss on April 25) in the semis and Yale (19-13 loss on April 14) or Rutgers (12-11 win on April 28) in the finals.

A history of grad student movement at UM

The Graduate Employee Organization was formed in 1988 to represent graduate student employees at the University of Massachusetts.

Last May, the GEO, which has about 1,400 members, affiliated with District 65/United Auto workers, which also represents physicans, dentists, engineers and editors.

1979
The Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission, which certifies unions and runs union elections, rejects a similar claim of the so-called Graduate Student Employee Union at UMass.

JANUARY 30, 1990
GEO leaders threaten to strike if UMass administrators do not recognize the GEO as a union by Feb. 7.

JANUARY 31, 1990
The Massachusetts Society of Professors, which represents UMass faculty, votes to support the GEO.

FEBRUARY 1, 1990
Administrators reject the GEO's bid for formal recognition by citing the 1979 MLRC decision.

FEBRUARY 7, 1990
The deadline for union recognition slips by but both sides continue to negotiate.

FEBRUARY 8, 1990
Labor studies graduate students march to the Whitmore Administration Building. The march begins a semester-long series of marches to Whitmore and Chancellor Duffey's office.

FEBRUARY 11, 1990
A march today is conducted by public health students, who post an enlarged "While You Were Out" message on Duffey's office door restating their demand for recognition.

FEBRUARY 14, 1990
The GEO breaks off negotiations after administrators refuse to recognize the union as an affiliate of the District 65/United Auto Workers.

FEBRUARY 15, 1990
GEO members vote overwhelmingly to hold a March 1 work stoppage for union recognition. Also, according to the GEO, administrators refuse to meet with the group while a strike threat is in the air.

GEO election a step away

GEO, administration finally agree on election terms

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Employee Organization and University of Massachusetts administrators, after a year of exchanging threats and accusations, are just one step away from reaching an agreement over holding a fall election for union representation.

"We have reached a tentative agreement with the administration to hold a fall election in the last week of October," said Gerald McCausland, GEO negotiating committee member.

The two sides yesterday came to an agreement after ironing out minor problems. The package only has to be ratified by the GEO membership as a whole before the election can be scheduled.

McCausland said he expects the membership to overwhelmingly support the agreement at the membership meeting Thursday.

Ballots will be mailed to all teaching assistants, teaching associates and research assistants on October 25. Graduate interns and graduate fellows whose duties are substantially the same as TAs will also be able to vote, he said.

GEO, an affiliate of District 65/United Auto Workers, and any other union which gathers signatures of 10 percent of graduate student employees will be on the ballot. Graduate student employees will also have the choice to vote against union representation.

In the agreement, 'central' administrators such as Chancellor/President Duffey and Provost O'Brien would be allowed actively participate in the election process.

However, bowing to a concern of the GEO that administrators would lead a union-bashing campaign, department heads, program directors and deans will not be allowed to call departmental meetings to discuss the unionization bid, McCausland said.

He said this was one of the most important tenets of the agreement, a clause which graduate students had especially pushed the negotiation team to win.

"In meetings with supervisors 'free and open' expression is impossible," McCausland said. "It is not a free speech issue. It is not overt coercion or intimidation but it does not promote free and open discussion of the issue."

Provost O'Brien, who is acting chancellor since Duffey is out of town, said that after a very long negotiation process he felt a 'satisfactory agreement' had been reached.

"It is the best possible outcome in view of the budget constraints we are under," he said. "My only regret is that the administration has been viewed as anti-graduate student. We have had them at the top of out agenda for many years."

O'Brien said in the fall administrators will not wage a union-bashing campaign as GEO leaders have charged but will still seek a role in informing graduate students of the disadvantages of having a union to represent them.

"We certainly won't take a anti-union stance," he said. "But we will anxiously want everyone to know the pros and cons of having a union."

O'Brien said the administration plans to encourage discussion of issues such as how much union dues will be per semester and faculty/graduate student relationships with a union in place.

Young Americans rally for Lithuania

20 come to hear Bush bashed on Student Union steps

By DAVID FORRESTER
Collegian Staff

The Young Americans for Freedom yesterday at a rally on the Student Union steps called for President Bush to aid Lithuanians in their secession from the U.S.S.R. and expressed their disappointment in the president's foreign policy.

Some 20 people attended the rally, including seven who spoke at the 25-minute-long event.

Bush has refused to put pressure on the U.S.S.R. to support the secession, while verbally supporting the democracy movement in Lithuania, which is a Soviet republic.

Lithuania was annexed to the Soviet Union in 1940 in an agreement between Soviet leader Josef Stalin and President Franklin Roosevelt. Self-proclaimed right-wing, ultra-conservative Ted Maravelias questioned Bush's policy toward Lithuania.

"I don't understand George Bush's thinking," Maravelias said.

He called Bush a 'pseudo-conservative' and advocated U.S. intervention in Lithuania in order to defeat Communism.

Several other speakers said Bush is not living up to the conservative ideology he campaigned with.

University Republican Club President Jim Black said: "As a Republican I am disappointed in George Bush."

Southwest Area Government president Bob Monaghan compared Bush to former president Ronald Reagan.

"Reagan showed his courage in Afghanistan when he set down missiles," Monaghan said.

Ed Corrigan, of the Young Americans for Freedom, said he had hoped the rally would not become a 'Bush-bashing' and would be a forum for support of democracy.

Maravelias, who earlier expressed his hope to see U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms in the Oval Office, called for 'rednecks and Christians' to join his conservative crusade.

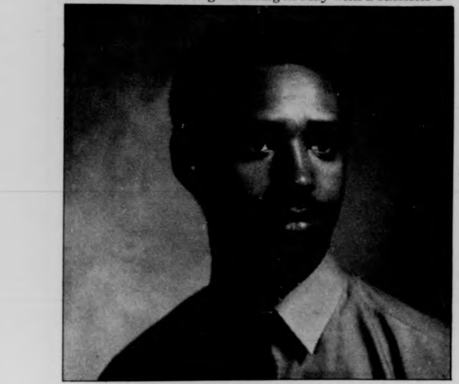
UMass senior wins summer of study

Joao Gomes will attend a sociology program for minority students

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts senior has won a place in the American Sociology Association's Minority Opportunity Summer Program, an 8-week seminar to encourage minorities to attend graduate school.

Joao Gomes, an African-American originally from the Cape Verde islands, will attend the University of Wisconsin this summer after graduating in May with a bachelor's in Sociology. Gomes, who lives in Boston, has a minor in Afro-American studies.



Joao Gomes

The seminar is all-expenses paid and Gomes will receive a $1,000 stipend. He will study with 200 other minority students from across the nation.

Gomes said his aim is to go to graduate school and become a professor of sociology.

Bolstered by education, Gomes said he will be able to study the Cape Verdean community, focusing on the increasing high school dropout rates and the community's identity.

"There are not too many studies done on the Cape Verdean community," Gomes said. "Being a sociology major, I can look into it."

Gomes said education also strengthens activism, particularly in civil rights.

"If you look at the past, all the leaders who have fought for civil rights, it is through education that they got together," he said.

Stephen Small, an assistant professor in the sociology department and Gomes' personal adviser, said the program is part of an effort to recruit more minority students into gradute school because of the "crisis in minority retention and the shortage of minority faculty."

Small said he encouraged Gomes to apply to the program.

"He's a conscientious and reflective student clearly proud of his identity and concerned for the interests of his fellow students," Small said.

Information about the MOST program, which began about two years ago, is available in the sociology deparment, Small said.

"It's something that students minority students should seek out and benefit from," he said.

Frats, sororities honored at banquet

Nearly 150 people turned out last week for the annual University of Massachusetts Greek Area Awards Banquet where 13 awards honoring fraternities and sororities for philanthropy and and general improvement were handed out.

Jeanne Bolduc, spokeswoman for the Panhellenic Council, the governing body of University sororities, said the evening was a great success.

"It was a wonderful opportunity to recognize the positive efforts of all of the men and women involved in Greek events," she said.

Receiving awards were:

- Most improved fraternity — Delta Upsilon
- Most improved sorority — Iota Gamma Upsilon
- Best philanthropy — Delta Upsilon
- Best fraternity chapter president — Ed Jewett, Delta Upsilon
- Best sorority chapter president — Suzanne Buckley, Iota Gamma Upsilon
- Greekman of the year — Amer Syed, Pi Kappa Alpha
- Greekwoman of the year — Melissa Silverstein, Delta Zeta
- Silver Chapter Awards — Sigma Kappa, Alpha Chi Omega, Alpha Epsilon Pi and Pi Kappa Alpha
- Brad Ringquist Memorial Award — Karen Renaud, Sigma Kappa and Amer Syed, Pi Kappa Alpha.

A committee composed of the director of the Greek Affairs Larry Korza and other Greek Area members selected the winners of this year's awards.

MARCH 1, 1990
Approximately 600 TAs, RAs and graduate interns strike the University.

MARCH 4, 1990
Cesar Chavez, United Farm Workers activist, speaks at the University and states his support for the GEO.

APRIL 5, 1990
The UMass board of trustees approves a procedure which the GEO may follow to gain union recognition. GEO leaders are outraged by the stipulations and say they will prevent a "fast and fair" union election.

APRIL 11, 1990
The GEO votes to hold an undisclosed civil disobedience action April 24 if an election is not held soon and without stipulations.

APRIL 17, 1990
In a letter to Randolph W. Bromery, chancellor of the Board of Regents of Higher Education, Provost O'Brien and Chancellor Duffey ask for authorization to conduct an election of graduate student employees to select union representation.

APRIL 18, 1990
Teaching assistants move their classes to Whitmore, starting the first of a three-day 'teach-in' at Whitmore.

APRIL 23, 1990
GEO leaders and administrators negotiate late into the night to try to agree on three stipulations which stand in the way of a union election. The GEO has threatened to stage a human blockade of Whitmore tomorrow.

The three sticking points are: a pledge that the GEO will not strike before a union election is held, the administration's support of the GEO before the MLRC, and the administration's pledge that it will remain neutral during a union election.

APRIL 24, 1990
GEO members do not blockade Whitmore but 150 graduate students arrive at 7 p.m. to picket. The negotiating team returns to the table.

APRIL 25, 1990
In an early morning march GEO demonstrates at Chancellor Duffey's campus house near the Orchard Hill Residential Area.

APRIL 30, 1990
The Board of Regents informs administrators that if the MLRC does not recognize the GEO, the GEO cannot go before the board to seek approval.

MAY 2, 1990
The GEO votes to ask TAs to withhold spring grades of all students except graduating seniors, transfer students, exchange students, and those whose financial aid forms cannot be processed without complete transcripts.

MAY 9, 1990
GEO rescinds its threat to withhold grades and drops objections to other stipulations. GEO leaders hope this will allow the administration space to bargain.

MAY 10, 1990
Both sides say a resolution will be reached within a few days.

MAY 14, 1990
Negotiators announce that an agreement has been reached. A union election is scheduled for Oct. 25th.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Posters incite emotional torture

This weekend, while in a friend's dorm room, I began to look around. Though I had been in that room over a dozen times, I had never before noticed the array of objectifying, degrading posters which portray women.

Marie-Elena Grant

The one poster that was of particular concern to me depicted a half-naked woman being lured and held down by five "Redneck Zombies." The blonde bombshell in this C-movie advertisement was dressed in a teeny bikini top, and frayed cut-off jeans, of which the zipper was half-way down. One "Zombie" man clenched a metal spoon aimed directly at the neck of this helpless woman.

My anger and disappointment towards my friend boiled inside me. I forced myself to speak up. What followed was an intelligent conversation that lasted until 5 a.m., and resulted in the removal of the disgustingly offensive material.

What I have not told you, and it is important to lay the groundwork for this scenario, is that my male friend is in a fraternity. As a matter of fact, we had just returned from a party at his house where I had witnessed a terrifying, but not so unusual event.

That evening, while standing in the lobby area of the social club, I heard frantic pounding on the front door. When I pushed the door open, towards North Pleasant Street, I found before me a sobbing, barefooted, beer-drenched woman crying for help. She had run to this house, from another nearby fraternity, to seek solace. Her tie-dye shirt, bewildered face and dark hair were sopping wet.

When I looked closer, the liquid dripping from her nose appeared whitish in color (beer foam or. . .) A sickening feeling queased all over my body, and as I think back on the scene, the feeling reappears in the pit of my stomach.

The woman in my story was not raped. Rather, she was emotionally, physically and psychologically tortured. She survived having beer thrown upon her by a variety of men, as they repeatedly called her degrading names. She is not going to press any charges.

"What do these isolated incidents have to do with one another?" some may ask. I can see clearly the positive correlation between the effects of semi-pornographic material that society is poisoned with, and the behavior of some men towards women.

College adults all over this campus have decorated their rooms with posters and pinups such as the ones I finally opened my eyes to this weekend. Liquor stores give away promotional pictures with such images as the "St. Paulie Girl" and the ever-popular Budweiser bathing beauties. The women in these advertisements are mere objects to some men. The roles that we take on as females are subject to this societal objectification.

My challenge to the men and women of UMass is to simply look around your rooms. As you take down the posters at the end of this semester, and scrape the tape from your four cement walls, ask yourself some questions.

"What kind of image for woman, or men, do my posters display?" and "Is this the type of poster that I'd want my grandmother to see?"

Marie-Elena Grant is a UMass student

Agencies aid stressed students

It as been our experience that spring is a time when some students feel a level of stress which affects their ability to cope adequately both personally and academically. Additionally, the highly publicized deaths of several students this year may compound such reactions this Spring semester.

You may become aware of such situations and so you should be alert to some of the symptoms of emotional distress — a high level of agitation, bizarre behavior, lethargy, inability to make decisions, depression or other atypical behavior.

Should you encounter such situations, we want to remind you that there are a number of campus agencies to which you might wish to make a referral. Each is accustomed to receiving inquiries and will be happy to answer any questions you may have. Any and all contacts will be treated as confidential.

In yesterday's Collegian there was further information about "Helping Someone in Distress."

Best wishes during finals and for a happy, relaxing and pleasant summer.

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs

Fighting men in a burning house

I would like to take issue with a recent article in the Multicultural Affairs page ("A long overdue calling out session," May 9) by a "Derrick X," who apparently feels he has properly ascertained the "weakness" in Black society.

I want to challenge Mr. X on just who is fit to call whom a "House Negro." Mr. X seems to have established a firm concept of what a "real" Negro is. Those outside this closed conceptual domain are apparently unworthy of their own skin color. This undoubtedly hurts, angers and alienates those who fall outside his world, but I would not bother to appeal to any sentiments of compassion and common sense that Mr. X might yet hold.

Instead, I would like to challenge the very idea of a fixed concept of what it means to be Black.

Does Mr. X believe that Africa and Africa-America are of one mindset, personality, politics and culture? If so, our would-be Black nationalist is parochial and ill-informed since Pan-Africa is extremely dynamic and diverse: we are poets and politicians, athletes and astronauts, dissidents and conformists, assimilationists and separatists, communists and free marketeers, layabouts and heads of state, Christians, Muslims, and Jews.

Africa and Africa-America need all hands aboard right now, and everyone has something to contribute. Intra-racial squabbling at this time of multiple crises is akin to two men fighting in a burning house.

We will always have ideological differences, as any race does, but we can join hands to put out the fires. If not, we can look forward to the continued dispersion and diffusion which are even now sharply bifurcating us into haves and have-nots.

Concerning those indicated by Mr. X for shrimp fried rice and fortune cookies, I would like to inform the parochial Mr. X that these are Chinese dishes, not Japanese ones.

Andrew Dice Clay has captivated the heart of America

What is funny? And what is dangerous? When do one's First Amendment rights end — in the advocacy of rape, brutality?

"I don't know about you, but I try to give 'em [women] a show. I pull their hair, rap 'em in the head a few times, kick their ass, tell them all the little things they like to hear in bed, 'F— me, pig.' "

Hilarious, eh?

"Peter, Peter pumpkin eater, had a wife, loved ta beat her. Smacked her twice across the head, f—ed her ass and went ta bed."

Andrew Dice Clay.

Need anyone say anything else? I had never heard of this particular individual before the big Saturday Night Live controversy.

When this gentleman (usage of this word is the epitome of satire) was selected to be a guest host of SNL because he is an American sensation, not only did cast member Nora Dunn refuse to appear on the show with him but the musical guest Sinead O'Connor also refused to show.

Their reason: he denigrates women, treats them as inferior and subservient, frequently refers to them as "pigs" and advocates their violent and sexual abuse.

To add to this list of wonderful Clay qualities (it is rather ironic that his name resembles the consistency of his brain), we have not only homophobia, but racism as well.

Last week Nightline ran a segment devoted to the SNL controversy. The show's executive producer, Lorne Michaels proclaimed that Clay was selected as the guest host because he is a "phenomenon," that his shows are selling out across the country, that he is "hot" property. To be a sexist, racist, scumbag comedian must be hip in Michaels' eyes.

Meredith O'Brien

In addition to this rather colorful episode in the Clay history, it might be interesting to note that MTV has banned this "hot" property from their airwaves for his deviation from his script during the MTV Video Awards, which included several of his most choice comments about women.

After listening to one of Clay's tapes and reading about his performance on Saturday's show (I had the devastating misfortune of missing this banner performance), I had one conclusion — people in this country make me sick. Not everyone, mind you. It's just the people who actually buy Clay's tapes, buy tickets to his shows, laugh boisterously and cheer his disgusting filth and put him on their television shows.

If everyone ignored Clay, if no one liked his humor, he would just fade away into the woodwork, rather, the gutter.

But no, he is popular. He is a phenomenon.

It is really disturbing to think that people would actually find him funny. His acts promote rape. They promote violence. They promote racial prejudices. They promote homophobia.

What is so funny?

It seems as though Clay has come to popularity at just the right time in history, at just the right time for his brand of bigotry and hatred.

Americans seem to be slowly reviving their Archie Bunkerisms, and revel when they hear Clay regurgitate what they have been saying privately in their living rooms.

Maybe Michaels is quite a businessman who is right on target. If Clay is what Americans want, Clay is what Americans will get.

"I smoke when I f— a chick and if the ashtray falls off of her ass, I give her a little singe and say, 'Come on, honey.' "

America is laughing with you, Clay, it's sad but they just love ya.

God, what a country!

Questioning Duffey's attempt to stifle investment debate

To Chancellor Duffey:

As you are well aware, the University has an investment policy which prohibits it from investing in South Africa or other nations with similar Apartheid policies.

Earlier this semester, a group of students not only discovered the University was standing for a second time in violation of its policy in regards to South Africa, but also the University was found to be holding bonds in the state of Israel.

Since then, it has been pointed out to you several times that the state of Israel has a series of discriminatory laws and a legal structure which differentiates between Jews and Palestinians.

It has also been noted to you that these laws, this legal structure, compelled the United Nations in 1965 to define Israel as a racist state, a definition agreed to by Israel itself.

The Law of Return, the Population Registration Law, the Status Law, and the various land laws, have consistently been pointed out to you as creating a separate and unequal system of justice and social services.

We who have worked in this issue have always worked within the system, meeting and discussing the problem with several administrators. We have asked you to sell the bonds or at least to ask those who created the investment policy, the Board of Trustees, for a general clarification of the clause we have been referring to.

Jamal Aruri

Instead you have, ignoring all arguments placed before you, stated without justification or evidence that our genuine concerns are "improper, offensive and inaccurate." We are, you will understand, shocked by such an attitude coming from the head of an academic institution.

You betrayed the commitment you have to the University and the spirit in which the investment policy was written. What is truly offensive is your blatant disregard for human suffering.

It is a situation in which the University can make a contribution (or at least take a stand) towards the alleviation of the undue misery of a people.

What is incomprehensible to us is the fact that you are attempting to stifle and silence even any debate on the issue. Your cutting short of the educational and bureaucratic process has sent a clear message to students that working for positive change within the system doesn't work.

We are sorely disappointed in the way you have abused your position by labeling those of us who are acting responsibly out of our concern for Palestinian human rights. You have squelched debate and created a dangerous atmosphere of intolerance on this campus.

Last week one Palestinian was brutally assaulted in a bathroom of an engineering building. Another one barely escaped an attack while trying to put up a poster for a speaker. And many more of us have been threatened, spat at and harassed while trying to bring this long ignored issue to light.

Surely, we have been made to suffer for our beliefs.

But there are those who suffered longer and greater for their very survival. As you have passed us off with a few thoughtless words and actions, we only hope that your humanity will allow you to remember those who are the real victims.

Jamal Aruri and The Palestine Solidarity Committee wrote this column

Due to the amount of controversy surrounding many recent columns, there will be space available for letters only on Wednesday, May 16.

This will be the last Letters to the Editor section for this semester. Letters should be about one page long, typed and double-spaced.

This is your last opportunity to respond to a column or bring your point of view to the page. Deadline is 2 p.m. today.

ARTS & LIVING

Ferron, latest star on folk horizon

By NICK OSTIS
Collegian Correspondent

Tracy Chapman, Suzanne Vega and Michelle Shocked are garnering the headlines, and deservedly so. Before you crown any of them as your queen though, lend your ears to Ferron, the Canadian singer/songwriter who must be included in this galaxy of galvanizing, guitar-toting troubadours.

Tonight and tomorrow, Clay Lady Productions brings this superb artist to the intimate confines of the Iron Horse.

The eldest of seven children, born into a struggling working class family outside Vancouver, British Columbia, Ferron (not her real name) taught herself to sing and play her mother's guitar in her early teens. Surely, music was her salvation, because she began laboring in a factory at the tender age of 15. At 22, one of her roommates had a dream set in medieval times in which she appeared with the name "Ferron," which in French, roughly means "iron and rust."

Molten passion, barbed-wire truth, reflective yearning — these phrases characterize Ferron's sometimes disturbing, occasionally visionary poetry, and moody, affecting music.

Born of her trying adolescence, rocky romances and hunger for justice and a better world, Ferron's verse is deeply personal yet universal and ultimately liberating — to her and the listener. Like a solitary flower pushing through a barren lava field or a ray of sunlight puncturing a black sky, Ferron's message, like a buoy, offers hope.

Consider these lines from "Testimony," the title track from her 1980 album: "You young ones/You're the next ones/And I hope you choose it well/Though you try hard/You may fall prey/To the jaded jewel/But by your lives be you spirit/And by your hearts be you women/And by your eyes be you open/And by your hands be you whole."

Or these from "It Won't Take Long," on her much-acclaimed 1984 Shadows on a Dime album: "At noon on one day coming, human strength will fill the streets/Of every city on our planet, hear the sound of angry feet/With business freezed up in the harbor, the kings will pull upon their hair/And the banks will shudder to a halt, and the artists will be there/Cause it won't take long, it won't take too long at all/It won't take long, and you may say/'I don't think I can be a part of that,' and it makes me want to say/Don't you want to see yourself that strong?"

Having eschewed the major record companies, Ferron records on her own label, Lucy Records, which is one reason the full-blown flame and accolades of the aforementioned women have eluded her. Distribution is costly; Gayle Scott, Ferron's manager, said, "I'm sure there's a huge audience out there that would love to hear Ferron, and as soon as we can afford to get to them, we will."

Lisa McCormick, from Southern Vermont, will precede Ferron. Her 1989 release, Spirit (Ruthie's Noise), her first full-length studio project composed of eight original songs, has received considerable airplay and favorable criticism around New England. The Valley Advocate praised it with a four-and-a-half star rating, while it charted on Boston's WMBR FM's list of top independent releases last year.

Ferron and Lisa McCormick will be appearing at the Iron Horse, May 15-16, at 7 p.m. and 10 p.m.

Let Coffee House put you at ease

LISA MILLEGAN
Collegian Staff

With finals fast approaching, some UMass students are choosing to abandon crowded parties and bars as sources of weekend entertainment. For those students who opt for a quieter pace, Cream of the Crop Coffee House in South Hadley may be just what they've been looking for.

Open Fridays and Saturdays from 9 p.m. to 12 a.m., the shop is transformed into an icecream parlor from 12 p.m. to 9 p.m. on the weekends and 12 p.m. to 8 p.m. during the week. Although the icecream parlor has been around since August 1988, the coffee shop was added three months ago, according to manager Arlene Sleisher.

The club bills itself as 'The alternative to the nightclub scene in the Pioneer Valley' and strives to offer quality live music entertainment in a comfortable setting. Sleisher says the shop has been getting a good response from the area and usually attracts a small crowd between the ages of 20 and 38 each night.

Roger Salloom of Eastern Entertainment who books the acts for the Coffee House said he mostly looks for soloists and duos because of the livingroom-like size of the club. "The acoustics are really excellent and the setting is intimate and high quality so I usually book folk performers and occasionally jazz musicians," he said. "The place is just too small for rock bands."

Annie Wenz performed her blues, folk and jazz standards May 11, she was followed by Jill Turner who played a folk-rock mix to a small crowd. Steve Key led off Saturday night with some folk music after which Janet Field of Texas showcased her original lyrics.

18 by composer/producer/instrumentalist Mitch Chakour. According to Salloom, Chakour has worked with Joe Cocker and Bonnie Raitt in addition to producing an unreleased album for Arlo Guthrie.

Chakour will be performing his original compositions on the synthesizer and guitar.

The Coffee House will showcase original folk music with Joe Keenan's performance scheduled for May 19. Honored at the Kerrville Folk Festival in Texas (where Michelle Shocked was discovered), Keenan will be performing most of his songs on the acoustic guitar.

Cream of the Crop serves pastries, cookies and fine coffees.

Customers aren't required to make a minimum order but there is a one dollar cover charge on music nights.

Last minute Arts things

Sorry, but we at the Arts Desk forgot to tell y'all that Phil Collins was slated to play Great Woods for three shows, June 6-8 but . . . they're sold out.

Also, since it's the last week of classes, we decided it was time to study and read all the books we haven't bought yet . . . there will be no "This Weekend" or "Calendar."

We've enjoyed compiling these entertaining lists for you all semester, and we apologize there won't be one, but this time you're on your own.

Tune in next semester for tons more fun.

So . . . good luck on finals and stuff . . . We're done for now!

— Sincerely, the Arts Desk.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A candid talk with your mate or partner leads to satisfactory agreement. A budget revision is helpful. Paying a short visit to your in-laws or relatives preserves harmony. Stick to your diet.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): An exciting telephone call will put you in high spirits, even if some spending is involved. Your personal appearance is especially important. Wearing bright colors will lighten your mood.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): News from an old friend will brighten your morning. an older individual may need more information now. A family conference is advised. Make certain to include this person in your weekend plans.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Leave an escape hatch in contracts. An understanding of the past helps you open important doors. Make payments on time to preserve your credit rating. Do not force your wishes on loved one.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Buckle down to business. Carefully consider the best way to utilize joint resources. New alliances can be cemented, leading to greater financial security. Fill in for a colleague.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Work goes smoothly. You benefit from tackling unpopular duties. A meeting with a chum or group may not be all you hope - take things one step at a time. Romance is pleasant.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Certain tasks or associations may try your patience. Stay calm. All you need is a break from routine. A new locale provides you with a fresh perspective. Romance takes a serious turn.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): People formerly at odds with you may change their philosophy now. Long-term pacts need reviewing. Promoting a team project will bring praise and higher pay. Family ties deepen. Show your sentimental side.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your goals are attainable if you enlist the aid of your friends. The time is ripe if you wish to apply for credit or repay a debt. Your allies will welcome a special token of affection.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Others may be stubborn or contrary. Show diplomacy and good things can still come of a meeting. Travel plans should be finalized today. Financial tips are valuable. Mate is your strongest ally.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Keep a positive attitude about what the future holds. You are on the verge of a breakthrough. Plans you put into operation now can bring lasting benefits. Romance soars to new heights.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A low-key day will suit you best. Serious dialogues with authority figures should be avoided or at least minimized. A personal relationship will respond to more nurturing. Spend a quiet evening at home.

Garber to coach last game at home after 36-year career

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

For 36 years, the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse program has never known another head coach.

Which makes it hard to believe that tomorrow at 4 p.m., Dick Garber will coach his final game on this campus.

He has decided to retire at the conclusion of this season, one in which "Garber's Gorillas" are 10-4 and seeded eighth in the NCAA tournament, ready to host Brown University tomorrow at Boyden Field.

Garber, who will be given an honorary law degree at graduation on May 27, recently reflected on his long stay at UMass, one that he thought would be much shorter than it has been.

When the cold weather-hating Garber graduated from Springfield College in 1950, he vowed that he would never travel this far north again. But in 1954, while attending a meeting of the American Association of Health, Physical Education and Recreation in New York, he was approached about returning to Massachusetts.

"Sid Kaufman [head of the UMass athletic department] asked me, 'Are you still interested in coaching lacrosse?' " Garber recalled. "He said, 'I'm from UMass and we're starting a new physical education program. There are some openings in teaching andf coaching, and lacrosse is one of them.' "

Garber accepted the job, and although he told his wife he thought it would be a temporary thing, he is still teaching and coaching today.

"The job has been great," Garber said. "The combination of teaching general Phys. Ed. classes, teaching in the classroom and coaching on the varsity level, a lot of schools don't have that opportunity and a lot of coaches don't want it. I enjoy the combination."

Garber has mixed his knowledge of teaching and coaching to turn UMass into a lacrosse power in the country.

On May 2 with a 21-18 win at Brown, Garber became just the ninth coach to ever win 300 games. But of those nine, he is the only one who ever did it strictly on the collegiate level. Although the game has changed drastically since Garber began coaching, the success never stopped.

"Since 1980 it's been a different kind of coaching," he said. "We're recruiting and getting kids who are excellent stickhandlers, and not teaching kids how to hold a stick."

But Garber has an equal fondness for teaching the game, taking someone who thinks lacrosse is just a city in Wisconsin and showing him the way. He used that formula to pave the way for the success of his early teams.

"I really enjoyed starting and building [the program] from the ground up," he said. "The first 10 years I had three guys who had ever played lacrosse. All the other guys I recruited from Phys. Ed. classes."

In spite of that, his teams ran off nine consecutive winning seasons after an 0-7-1 mark in the inaugural 1955 campaign. And his undefeated 1969 team (11-0) consisted of seven out of 10 starters who came from Phys. Ed. classes."

"I suppose most coaches would prefer to take great players and 'strategize' the game," Garber said. "But I look at a player like Paul Kinnane from Swansea, Ma. who had never played lacrosse, and he became an All-American [in 1981]."

Dick Garber will coach his final game at Boyden Field tomorrow when UMass hosts Brown in a first-round NCAA playoff game.

Garber has produced a full list of All-Americans, All-New England players and New England champion teams. But often he is criticized for never making the Final Four, never mind having never won a national championship.

"People always ask me, 'Aren't you frustrated you've never won the national championship?' Hell, no," Garber said. "We've never really been in the game for the national championship until the last five years. We've only been on a scholarship program for the last five years."

Instead, Garber prefers to stress focus on one game at a time, and that the end result will tell how good his team is.

UM-Brown on The Hill

Tomorrow's NCAA tournament game between the University of Massachusetts and Brown will be played at 4 p.m at Boyden Field.

Because this is an NCAA-sponsored event, there will be an $4 admission charge for everyone. Unfortunately, flashing a valid UMass ID won't work this time.

The winner of tomorrow's game will travel to Syracuse on Sunday to face the top-seeded Orangemen. The time for that game has yet to be determined.

"I tell the players when the season starts that, rather than set a goal for the playoffs, to focus on being the best we can be," he said. "If you set the Final Four as a goal and lose a game or two, the guys start playing out of fear of failure, and you can't win like that."

And Garber knows plenty about winning. But he also plays it fair, never trying to sneak into the cheating that is so prevalent in much of college athletics today.

"We run our program on a high level, and most coaches know that when they compete against UMass, they're in for a clean, hard game," Garber said.

In a pair of recent games, coaches frowned when Garber called for stick checks and found both to be illegal. Rules are rules, he says, and you have to live by them.

> "People say, 'You're too concerned with how (the players) are doing in school. Shouldn't you be concerned with winning and losing?' No, that's a shallow concern. I try to convey that to all the players. There are more important things in the world than lacrosse games . . . On game day, those two hours are the most important thing."
> – UMass coach Dick Garber

The rules have changed greatly since Garber entered the game. The latest set were designed to speed up the game, and Garber feels that it has turned into a fans' and players' game.

"The players prefer a run-n-gun game. I think 18-15 games are exciting to watch and play," he said.

In a way, the speeded-up game is similar to one that Garber tried to institute a few years ago. The idea came to him by accident after a heavy snowfall nearly cancelled an intrasquad scrimmage.

Instead, they plowed half the field between the sidelines and played across the width of the field.

"We had the same number of players, but took 10 yards off either side, eliminating the 'dead zone.' It was a fun game and nothing changed as far as strategy," Garber said. "I still like that, but I don't think it has a chance of being incorporated."

Rules may come and go. Some players may have been picked out of a rally on the Student Union steps, while others have been roll-dodging since before they learned to walk.

But in the end, Garber has always stressed the same thing no matter who he is coaching/teaching.

"The game still boils down to top physical condition and fundamentals — catching, throwing, shooting. You still have to do that," he said. "But there are more greater athletes playing lacrosse now."

And the message that Garber has preached to every athlete he has ever faced has never changed in his 36 years. He still understands the importance of the "student" part of student-athlete.

"People say, 'You're too concerned with how [the players] are doing in school. Shouldn't you be concerned with winning and losing?' No, that's a shallow concern," he said. "I try to convey that to all the players. There are more important things in the world than lacrosse games."

As much as his stellar record of success, Garber takes equal pride in seeing former players doing well in life as doctors, lawyers, successful people in the real world.

"I tell my recruits, 'Don't come here just to play lacrosse. Come here to go to school AND play lacrosse,' " he said. "The athletic experience is an important and vital part of the overall college experience, but it's not the end result. It's just the icing on the cake."

Garber however, is still a coach and doesn't just forget about the games. After all, you don't stick around for 36 years by losing.

"On game day, those two hours are the most important thing," he said.

But Garber has never ignored the fact that college athletics are supposed to be played for fun.

"I'd say nine out of 10 guys play for fun," he said. "I always set, 'Let's have fun,' but that means we work hard."

For 36 years, Garber has worked hard to turn UMass into a respected team throughout lacrosse circles.

Thirty-six years — I can't believe that," Garber said. "It seems like 10, 12, 15, maybe 20. I lost the concept of time. But it's been a fun 36 years."

Men's track team eighth at New England meet

By GREG SUKIENNIK
Collegian Correspondent

Going into the New England Championships this past weekend at Northeastern University in Boston, University of Massachusetts men's track coach Ken O'Brien was confident of a top 10 finish overall.

O'Brien's confidence was not in vain, as the Minutemen ended their spring season with an eighth place finish. UMass finished the two-day competition with 26 points, well behind first place Dartmouth (101 points — 40 more than second place Northeastern) but only five points out of fifth.

The Minutemen were led by strong performances by Brian Bednarek, Jon Corso, Tom Degnan, Steve Brown, Kevin Walters, and Herb Heffner. All six turned in personal best efforts in what coach O'Brien called "a strong team effort across the board."

Bednarek was the first to place for UMass, finishing fifth in the decathlon with 5,975 points on Friday.

"It was by far his best [decathlon] effort of the year," said O'Brien. "He [Brian] gave a real good effort, and achieved personal bests in several of the events."

Degnan and Corso followed up by taking first and fifth place respectively in the 10,000 meters. Degnan crossed the finish line in 30:30.5, while Corso followed close behind in 31:04.7. Again, both times were personal bests for each runner. Both Degnan and Corso qualified for the IC4A championships at Yale, held this weekend in New Haven, Conn.

Heffner also qualified for the IC4A's by placing third in the steeplechase, shaving five seconds off his previous best time at 9:10.3. Brown also earned a trip to New Haven, coming in third in the 400 meters at 47.87 — again, a personal best time. Walters did well in the 200 meters (22.05), as did Matt Rosenberg, who qualified for the semifinals.

O'Brien summed up the spring season, saying "We ended the season on a real positive note. We responded to a disappointing end to our fall season with hard work, and it paid off . . . we came on real strong at the end."

Of the team's prospects for next year, O'Brien added "We're only losing four runners to graduation, which bodes well for the future."

DU takes Olympus Cup title

Delta Upsilon fraternity clinched the Olympus Cup last week, awarded to the fraternity on campus that has accumulated the most intramural points during the school year.

The race for the championship had been close between Delta Upsilon and Pi Kappa Alpha throughout the year.

Delta Upsilon was leading Pi Kappa Alpha by four points going into the playoffs for softball. Last Wednesday, Delta Upsilon beat Eight Men Out, 12-4. Meanwhile, the Has Beens beat Pi Kappa Alpha, 4-0, preventing Pike from gaining any points on DU.

"We've been close in the past, but we've never won the Cup before," said Paul Koster, Delta Upsilon's co-intramural chairman.

"Winning the Olympus Cup was our goal since the beginning of the year, and everybody worked extra hard in hopes of winning it," said Buddy Traber, DU's co-intramural chairman.

Legal Services Center proposal rejected

By GAYLE LONG
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts administrators last week rejected a proposal to restore limited litigation power to the Legal Services Center, a campus agency for student rights that provides legal counsel to UMass students, said a legal services representative.

The proposal was submitted on Nov. 22, 1989. Joanne Mei, Chairperson of the Legal Services Center Governing Board, said litigation power was taken away in the summer of 1987 and since then legal services staff members have only been able to give advice and make referrals to private attorneys.

Staff members from the Legal Services Center said they take the rejection to mean administrators believe the university should not be providing litigation services to students.

Dean of Student Affairs, Dennis Madson, one of the signers of the letter, said the rejection was a reaffirmation of the 1987 Board of Trustees decision.

Founded in 1973, the stated mission of the Legal Services Office, now called the Legal Services Center, was to "provide counseling, advice, representation, and education to the student body of the University of Massachusetts, Amherst concerning all legal matters."

Legal Services is funded through mandatory student fees allocated to them by Student Government Association and the Graduate Student Senate.

Mei said she was concerned about students who often have no where else to go for legal counsel. Most students are designated 'low-income,' or live on a fixed budget, she said. "Most students cannot afford to hire a private lawyer, or for that matter, neither can their families."

In the administrations' rejection letter, General Counsel William Searson disagreed with Mei's premise stating that while many students receive financial aid they do not all "automatically fall into the 'low-income' category."

In a phone interview yesterday, Madson voiced concerns about the future of the Legal Services Center. Madson said he believes the true mission of Legal Services should be "to help students understand their legal rights, as well as other alternatives to litigation."

Madson said he disagreed with General Counsel Searson that students are not in a low-income bracket. "The students here at UMass alone are receiving $40 million in financial aid," he said.

Two seniors to speak at graduation

By JULIA SEREBRINSKY
Collegian Staff

Two graduating students from the University of Massachusetts will give speeches on their academic and social experiences at the University of Massachusetts during the 120th Commencement Ceremony May 27th in McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

Thomas V. Ciampi, a candidate for a Bachelor of Arts degree and Michelle A. Toth, a candidate for a Business Administration degree were chosen by a special committee to be the key-note undergraduate speakers during this year's Commencement.

The committee, made up of selected members from the Student Government Association, the Collegian, and faculty and staff, made their decision after reviewing speeches submitted by graduating seniors on the theme of Higher Education.

Ciampi said he will focus his speech on the 'little chunk of wisdom' that he has gained after attending UMass for the last 3 years. This acquired 'wisdom' includes realizing the difficulties involved in resolving problems on the international and na-

$1 million Student Center envisioned

College of engineering receives private funds for building

By DAVID R. MARK
Collegian Staff

It's become common knowledge at the University of Massachusetts that the state's fiscal crisis has hurt UMass in more ways than the school has departments.

Engineering Dean James E. A. John knows this, too. But it hasn't stopped him or the college of engineering from planning a $1 million Engineering Student Center.

"There's certainly a fair amount of risk being taken," he said. Construction of the center, a planned addition to Marcus Hall, would begin in September.

What makes the center special is that it is being entirely funded through private support. According to John, it is the first such engineering building to be funded privately.

"That's something the University is going to have to do more and more since the money from the state is not going to be there," said John, dean of the college of engineering since 1983. "We got a large private donation and we're hoping to get the additional support from alumni and friends of the university."

John said the fiscal crisis did not have an effect on the decision to go private.

"We would have to get in a line to get priority for state monies. In fact, there's currently an engineering building on the list of state-funded buildings," he said, adding even he would place a $31-million building ahead of a $1 million student center.

Which is not to say the student center is not important.

According to Bob Markley, director of development for the college of engineering, constructing the student center is a response to an urgent need.

"The reason it's so special is that space over here for student activities has been sacrificed to teaching and research functions. This is our first opportunity to address a lack of space dedicated specifically to students."

Markley said because of a lack of space, engineering students have been forced to use empty classrooms in Marcus and Harston Halls or study at home.

Administration, GEO forestall final agreement

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Employee Organization and campus administrators said yesterday they are not in agreement over a union election, reversing Monday's long-awaited announcement that the two parties had reached a tentative agreement and an election would be held Oct. 25.

The problem arose because of an apparent lack of communication over election conditions, said Marc Kenen, GEO negotiating committee member.

The GEO had agreed not to strike before an election is held in exchange for a curriculum fee waiver for graduate students, Kenen said.

However, he said when administrators put their version of the agreement into writing, "a major disagreement became apparent [to GEO leaders] because the agreement did not have a curriculum fee waiver clause."

Kenen said GEO negotiators demanded the waiver since the fee is "a $450 — or whatever it will be next semester — pay cut from from our pay checks." This semester graduate students who were eligible received financial aid to cover the curriculum fee.

"In order to have an election the administration says they must have a no-strike pledge," Kenen said. "But for us to give them this pledge we must have their pledge that graduate students will not be subject to a curriculum fee.

"I feel it would be irresponsible of the GEO leadership to agree to a no-strike clause without adequate assurance concerning curriculum fee waivers," Kenen said.

Administrators said they cannot promise a curriculum fee waiver when the University's budget for the fall is so uncertain.

Susan Pearson, director of academic administration and the administration's chief negotiator, said: "We do not know what our budget will be next fall. We are very hopeful that we can give them this guarantee, but at the present time we cannot guarantee this."

Pearson said the administration will not sign an agreement without a no-strike pledge from the GEO.

She said the administration will have a better understanding of the financial situation sometime in the summer and hope an agreement can be signed then.

"We won't sign until there is a no-strike pledge," she said. "So we proposed to the GEO that we wait until the figures are in. We could sign an agreement in the summer."

GEO has scheduled a membership meeting at 3 p.m. tomorrow in Mahar Auditorium to discuss the recent development.

tional level as well as those faced by UMass.

Reflecting on his experiences at UMass, Ciampi said, "Through our experiences at the University there were many protests and issues, international and local which tried to bring to light issues like Apartheid, Palestinians, or the Military-Industrial Complex.

"When budget cuts came last semester, marches and boycotts did not solve anything," he said. "A political presence had little effect on the legislature. That was a big learning experience. I got to understanding how large the problems are in the world by seeing how hard it is to knock down a wall like this."

In the speech "Taking Pride in UMass," Michelle A. Toth will focus on the accomplishments of the graduating class. "The class deserves praise for what we've been through," she said.

She added that the University should be proud of dealing with conflicts, which include personal relationships and social issues.

"There is a tendency to look at the negative aspects of change. But change is important because improving the University is a positive thing," she said. "I am focusing on the positive aspects ranging from people, to programs, to cultural diversity at the University.

"I feel that graduation should be a positive thing," she said.

Ciampi, who is finishing a Bachelor's Degree in Individual Concentration titled "Writing about American Society," plans to pursue a degree in journalism.

"The real world is a breeze compared to college," Ciampi said. There will be a 40-hour week and I won't have to worry about homework or exams. I am relieved that I'm out of school."

Necessities faces second budget cut

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

Necessities/Necesidades, a battered women's center in Northampton has already been cut $18,000 this year by the Department of Social Services and is now facing a cut of $13,346 by August 1, 1990 if a tax package is not approved by the state legislature.

"This is a terrible message for battered women. They are not being offered options and the violence against them is not being condemned. The rights of women are not a priority in the state," said Administrative Coordinator, Susan Stinson.

Necessities provides free counseling for children and their mothers, a 24-hour hotline, shelter, and legal assistance for women trying to escape emotional or physical abuse.

A new $1 million cut will take away funding for counseling for all battered womens' centers statewide. At Necessities the 24-hour hotline may have to be cut and this could mean it would only be open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., she said.

"Often times women call in the middle of the night needing shelter to escape from abuse and we will not be able to provide it for them," Stinson said.

Necessities no longer has the resources or funds to help battered women find housing and they now have to refer them to other sources. "We know that women have gone back to abusers because they have not been able to find housing," Stinson said.

The Community Education Coordinator has already been cut from the staff of Necessities. A loss, which Stinson said, negates half of the expressed mission of the center by decreasing their ability to provide educational services aimed at making people aware about violence against women.

"We were trying to reduce violence against women instead of just a band aid solution," Stinson said.

In addition, the Administrative Assistant has also been cut. "I have to work 52-hour weeks to get everything done," said Stinson.

Leaders of SGA reflect on issues of '89-'90

Last meeting of semester on horizon tonight

By RUSSELL SKELTON
Collegian Staff

On the eve of the last Undergraduate Student Senate meeting of the 1989-90 academic year, scheduled for tonight, members of the Student Government Association reviewed some main issues of the past year and offered their views on what might be expected in the year ahead.

Dan Chesnicka, senate speaker since April 1, said a major shift of funding from the Campus Center Board of Governors and area governments to Registered Student Organizations in the 1991 budget passed last week was a very significant change.

"This issue stimulated a lot of intense feelings," Chesnicka said. "The reallocation, though, was a move toward more accountable responsible use of trust funds."

Chesnicka said he foresees additional proposals next year to change the internal structure of the SGA.

"The SGA has a history of overlooking RSO's. Many of them have been funded that probably should not have been," he said. "The SGA will be looking at establishing more restrictive guidelines for funding RSO's."

SGA President Natasha Diephuis said she has seen a change in the focus of the SGA. "There tended to be less debate on wider political issues and more attention paid to issues that are directly relevant to students at UMass."

Diephuis said she expects to work closely in the future with the other SGA leaders on issues such as student cable TV channels.

"I expect to be working with Housing Services quite a bit. I want to make sure we get 3 channels for students," Diephuis said.

Angus McQuilken, student trustee-elect said many students don't realize there was a big reduction in Student Activity Trust Funds due to lower enrollment this past year.

"It is to the credit of the SGA that in this time of budget cutbacks at many levels, the SGA held the SATF fee in line and made many difficult yet necessary cuts," he said.

Looking ahead, McQuilken said state support for public higher education would be an important issue. "Next fall I'd like to see the SGA join MASSPIRG in a drive to add many more students to the list of registered voters in this state."

Jeff Turco, a senator from Brown Residence Hall, said student empowerment is the most important issue facing the SGA. "This past year the attitude was 'why challenge the administration if we're going to lose anyway,'" Turco said. "I want to see that change. The administration should understand that when it comes to the trust fund, they work for us."

John Dunlap, who was senate speaker until April 1, said he had been frustrated by the personal conduct of a few senators. "It is not a political or ideological issue." he said. "These people believe they can act devoid of any consideration for others. The SGA can't function if constituents keep sending these people."

Professors recognized

Six honored from field of 37 nominees

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff

This year's Distinguished Teacher Awards will go to Frank C. Kaminsky of the industrial engineering department, Arthur F. Kinney of the English department, Jerome L. Myers, of the psychology department and posthumously to Mark W. Sayre, who was an associate professor of forestry and wildlife management.

Lou Berney, a teaching assistant for the English department, and Mary Yoko Brannen, a teaching assistant for the School of Management, have also been recognized as distinguished teachers.

Winners were chosen from 37 nominees representing the 10 schools and colleges and 24 departments at the University of Massachusetts, according to Nigar Khan, special assistant to Vice Chancellor for Research Samuel F. Conti. Candidates are recommended by present and previous students, she said.

Conti, who is the dean of the Graduate School appointed the seven-member selection committee. Louis S. Greenbaum, a history professor, acted as chairman and worked with undergraduate students Megan Miller and James Black, graduate students Nicholas Minutillo and Susan Theberg, professor of psychology Richard Halgan, and professor of German Susan Cocalis, Khan said.

Winners will be honored at the May 16 Graduate School awards dinner, along with recipients of the 1990 Faculty Fellowships, she said. Faculty Fellowships have been awarded to Yvonne Haddad, professor of history, William Irvine, professor of physics and astronomy and Arnold Rosenberg, professor of computer and information science.

Recipients will also be recognized by Provost Richard D. O'Brien at the graduate commencement on Saturday, May 26, and by President/Chancellor Joseph Duffey at the undergraduate commencement on Sunday, May 27, she said.

Professors will be awarded a $3,000 prize and a bronze plaque, while teaching assistants will be awarded a $2,000 prize and a bronze plaque, she said.

Correction

Because of an editing error in yesterday's paper, it was incorrectly stated that Lithuania was annexed by the Soviet Union in 1940 as part of an agreement between Soviet leader Josef Stalin and U.S. President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

In fact, FDR had no involvement in the agreement. Lithuania and the other Baltic nations of Estonia and Latvia were annexed in June 1940 by the Soviet Union after a non-aggression pact had been signed between the Soviet Union, led by Josef Stalin, and the German government of Adolph Hitler in August 1939.

GSS ratifies agreement with BOG for next fiscal year

BY MARGARET McATEER
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Senate, last night, ratified a fiscal agreement with the Board of Governors, discussed allocation of space in the Campus Center music room, and passed a motion endorsing a boycott of California grapes.

The fiscal agreement, which required a two thirds majority vote to pass, set the amount of money which the GSS will transfer into the BOG tax account at $2 per GSS tax paying student for each fiscal year.

The agreement also stated that the GSS can alter its payment to the BOG by getting a two-thirds vote from its members but that these recommendations can only be considered annually in January and February.

GSS Vice-President Pierre LaLiberte announced that the administration has given part of the music room in the campus center to the GSS to be used as a graduate lounge. The lounge will be opened in September. The remainder of the lounge will continue to be accessible to undergraduate students.

Roberto De La Cruz, the national vice-president for the United Farm Workers Union addressed the Senate on a motion which would endorse the boycott of California table grapes. He urged community members to shop at stores which have discontinued the sale of California table grapes and said the University should not buy or serve table grapes.

UMass to send books to E. Europe

By LISA SHAPIRO
Collegian Staff

Members of the University Democrats and the Massachusetts AFL-CIO, a statewide activist group, are asking students to donate used textbooks to be sent to Eastern European students.

Kevin O'Donnell, member of the AFL-CIO/Frontlash, and Chris Lee, co-president of University Democrats, said they became aware that many textbooks in eastern Europe are between 20 and 30 years out of date after speaking with foreign students at a recent conference on eastern European affairs.

"I'm sure they will be glad to get these books," Lee said. "We talked to some students at the conference and they told us of the need. I'm sure they'll be greatly appreciated."

At the conference, which was held at Georgetown University in March, students were asked to organize campus book drives.

At UMass, the two groups began collecting books yesterday and will do so today, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the Student Union.

"We want to send books to Eastern Europe to assist fellow students trying to get themselves caught up with the rest of the world as far as academics are concerned," O'Donnell said.

Recent uphevels have lifted Soviet domination from eastern European countries, and it has become apparent that basic new student center

Another consideration was continued accreditation with the accreditation board for engineering and technology, John said.

"They inspect your program periodically and one thing they look for is space for students to study," John said.

But would the board really drop accreditation for the University?

"It's always a fear," he said. "There are a number of things that occur that base accreditation, including the quality of faculty, laboratories and curriculum. But it's always a fear."

Both John and Markley hope the new center will attract students to engineering. The college currently enrolls 1,700 undergraduate and 600 graduate students.

"It's probably the worst sector of the campus as far as landscaping or the need for renovation. It's hard to bring students in," John said, adding that the last engineering building to be constructed was Marcus Hall, and that was more than 25 years ago. He said if all goes well, a landscaping project will begin soon after the center is completed.

John hopes the student center will be finished by the summer of 1991, in time to attract the class of 1995 and beyond.

Construction will begin, John said, as soon as the entire $1 million is pledged toward the center.

According to Markley, the college expects to raise $350,000 in gifts from alumni and $400,000 from corporations and foundations. Fund raising from alumni, which began on April 17, will continue for six weeks, with more than 8,000 alumni to be solicited.

To kick off the fund-raising campaign, John accepted a $250,000 lead pledge to the center by Robert C. Gunness and his wife, Beverly. The full pledge will be committed upon the college's raising another $500,000 from alumni and friends.

And John said the college will raise the necessary money. "I'm confident all will go well," he said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted

Appreciating six semesters' worth of writing columns

I'm not even sure if I realize yet how privileged I have been for the last six semesters.

Every week, I regularly have had a space about this size, set aside for one basic reason — to talk about whatever was on my mind.

Why me?

I don't know.

I hate to think I've been regarded as "special" just because I am a staff member. But I would prefer to believe that I am exercising a right that everybody on this campus has — the ability to express our opinions in print.

Granted, sometimes it's a little more difficult to decipher some of the stuff that pops out of my head. On a campus such as this, there is often question about how my writings of such light-hearted nature can be included on this page weekly, while other more important subjects are ignored.

More than once, I have overheard a conversation where some irate column writer has stormed into our windowless basement office and demanded, "How can you run Jim Clark's trash and not print my column?"

On the surface, it would appear that abortion and racism, budget cuts and administrative problems are the crucial issues we face today. They are, no doubt.

But I've always had a problem with life as it is. Pick up a newspaper every day and a great mood can be turned into depression in an instant after scanning the front page.

People always ask me why my columns aren't more controversial. Why don't I get my knees dirty and dig down, writing things that will send the populace into a letter-writing crusade?

For some writers, that's fine. But that's not me.

I've always subscribed to the theory of looking on the bright side. In some cases that's not possible. But why not try?

Jim Clark

I've gotten much greater satisfaction out of poking fun at the protest at the Statehouse, the student strike, the presidential race, the U.S. mail system, and various other topics. Often the readership is sick of hearing the same thing, day after day, week after week. Some fresh blood is needed. Something that will jar people out of their doldrums and, maybe, put smiles on their faces.

That doesn't mean I haven't written my share of things that weren't controversial. Occasionally, something just pisses you off and you have to sound off. Believe me, I have the letters posted on my bulletin board to prove this point.

Which leads me to another point. No matter how irate a letter writer may be, no matter how weird some people think (someone actually wrote a letter against my anti-drug column a couple of years ago), no matter how far the veins may be bulging out of a particular person's forehead . . .

I've always appreciated letters in response to my columns. Yes, it's true what we say about receiving letters — that it shows that someone actually reads the stuff we write. But it goes beyond that.

No matter how well-schooled we try to make ourselves sound when we write a column, we don't always know everything. Every once in a while, we miss a point here or there. An important one maybe, one that totally changes the gist of our message.

More than anything, my dealings with this page have been a learning experience. I've read so many differing opinions on so many different subjects in four years, it's been a sort of education in its own.

One last bit of advice, one I learned while trying to finagle my way through four years of UMass life: It never hurts to be persistent. If rejected once, try again. Make people know you're genuinely interested, whether it's getting a class, a job, or writing a column.

You won't have my nonsense obstructing your path any longer. Thanks for everything.

Special college remembrances in a farewell column

Yes, folks, strike up the band, send up the balloons, throw confetti on a loved one. This is my last column of all time. I know you'll want to celebrate for more reasons than one.

Before I begin, please indulge me in making a little disclaimer. This editorial won't be my best. Not even close. I'm stressed out, I'm eating a double burger from the Hatch, and I'm in a shitty mood. Oh, did I mention I'm graduating?

Josh Galitsky

Something cracked me over the head like a falling piano yesterday as I came to the light-dawns-on-marble-headed realization that there is no way to sum up a chapter of your life in a 62-line column. So why even try?

If there is one thing I have learned, it's that life can't be tied up in neat little packages. That would be too easy. Part of the magic of life is that it spills out all over the place and surrounds us with the sense that we have lived.

And I have lived indeed. So let me sit back in my own little world right now, munch on my death burger, and reflect on just some of the fond memories I'm taking with me.

I will always remember my orientation summer. I was so enthralled with the women of Mary Lyon, that I almost got locked out of my dorm and had to sleep in the Northeast quad.

I will always remember my first roommate Rock-a-doo Ginsu. He taught me what a funnel was and how to not feel guilty about flunking Spanish.

I will always remember the early years on 7 East Dickinson. Nutty people, beach parties, murder mysteries and strippers in the lounge. Not to mention a million things I can't mention.

I will always remember my first college scoop (uggh) and the time I scooped my TA (I was young and silly and also got an A).

I will always remember much trips to Mental Health. It helped.

I will always remember taking an evil class at Mt. Holyoke which turned me off to the Five College system forevermore.

I will always remember my last roommate Daryl. Oh did we raise hell! An RA's nightmare! The lost year of madness indeed!

I will always remember my insane friends from home bringing up 14 rowdy guys to my dorm room on the night of my RA interview.

I will always remember hangin' with a guy named Suave. He was cool personified and helped make school and our womanless Key West excursion a bearable blast.

I will always remember late-night raunchy questions games with many crazy people. Want to truly know someone? Play questions.

I will always remember auditioning for my first show, Grease, and getting a part. That was the start of my illustrious, talentless show-biz career.

I will always remember a goofy, fun-loving RA staff that really cared about people. I also remember an RA training that proved to me that nobody can party like a group of insane RAs.

I will always remember Halloween fraternity parties where I dissed on large blockheads to their faces because I was in costume and they thought I was only joking.

I will always remember piercing my ear for no apparent reason.

I will always remember anyone I ever called friend.

I will always remember John, Jarrett, and Tom. My best friends.

And I will always remember writing for all of you. Your phone calls, letters and sentiments were touching. I'm glad I could give you a piece of who I am, this year.

By the way, me and my girlfriend are still going out, I'm hoping to get a writing job with Disney/Touchstone in September, and I'm getting a stomachache from this burger.

Have a wonderful life.

Egotism stifles student leadership

As a graduating senior who has been a senator of the SGA, a governor of the BOG as well as a participant in other areas of student empowerment, I leave this University disheartened by the lack of cooperation among the areas of student leadership.

In this time of fiscal chaos, where programs and student events are being axed at the hands of administrators and trustees, the student leadership is too busy battling it out among each other. This energy would be better focused towards united student activism to benefit the students, not student leaders' egos.

What was once one of the most powerful student governments in the country has become a bickering pack of resentful predators of public recognition. The Graduate Student Senate dislikes the Board of Governors, the Board of Governors distrusts the Student Government Association, the SGA dislikes and distrusts the BOG.

No one is working together. In my four years I've learned that this is the perfect formula that the administration hopes for and then uses to change policy without student input.

Unite, put aside personal feelings and honestly and truly think about the students whom you represent. The elected student representatives should stand together. We should offer each other support and advice, and once this is accomplished, UMass students will have the leadership it deserves and desperately needs.

Residents must open their eyes

I am a resident in a neighborhood infested with ignorant residents. How can I begin, except to say that these particular residents are more concerned with continuing stereotypes of "Animal House"-type fraternities than to open their eyes and see how much the Greek system actually does to help our town.

Let's start by eliminating the accusations that we are "trash," who subject our town to "expressions of misogyny, racism and anti-Semitism." The Greek system in fact emphasizes three main ideals: brotherhood, philanthropy and being social. Brotherhood means always having an organization which encourages academics and university success.

Philanthropic events are our main emphasis. This semester Greeks spent endless hours doing community service, such as delivering meals to the elderly of Amherst and raising thousands for local homeless charities.

Greeks are among the most "aware" students. Greek houses hold frequent workshops dealing with topics such as date rape, sexual awareness and racism.

With several Jewish fraternities and sororities, and with Jews in nearly every house, anti-Semitism will be a difficult accusation to prove.

Greeks are among the most active and respected students at our University. Greeks lead our campus as well. We hold positions all the way up to the president of the Student Government Association.

The University Greek system is an unnoticed asset to the Amherst community.

It is time that residents open their eyes, support our efforts and help us to eliminate the negative connotations of Greek life.

Reorganization of concert needed

The sun was shining for the 1990 Spring Concert organized by UPC. Descending for the library at 2 p.m., I was ready to enter the concert and dance to the music from the visiting artists. But I became extremely disturbed with the way they had surrounded the concert area with a plastic red fence.

Students were upset with the fact that one needed to have an I.D. to get into the area, and students had brought their friends and families to enjoy the event. Even alumni couldn't enter.

The I.D. check was causing people to cheat their way in by borrowing an I.D. of a student. Those with I.D.s had to submit to a bag search and a body frisk, as police armed with billy clubs stood by waiting for trouble.

The entire entrance way procedure and the wall dividing students for the general population was a clear symbol of the way the educational system keeps the underprivileged out.

The concert organizers were not building trust and a feeling of community among us, but reinforced alienation, inequality and distrust.

The purpose of art is to bring people together in a community of harmony, not divide us apart. Therefore, the Spring Concert should be completely reorganized in such a way as to allow free community participation and access so that we are not forced to live in a police state.

Taking a stand not propaganda

Why is it that all pro-Israel articles are "propaganda" whereas anti-Israel columns are considered to be "truths?"

As active leaders of Hillel, we are proud that our organization has taken a stand in support of the Jewish homeland — ISRAEL.

If people like Mazen Credi ("Hillel: a propaganda outlet?," May 11) expect Hillel to sing campfire songs and make matzah ball soup while our people are being slandered, we are sorry to disappoint them. Because of their swamp of anti-Israel lies, we will emerge stronger than ever.

Credi's column goes way beyond political criticism. It is a clever mask of blatant anti-Jewish hatred.

Where have we heard that the Jews "always seem to be controlling the U.S. media" before? This is usually accompanied with the charge that Jews manipulate the economy. How long must Jews bear the burden of political and economic instability? Lies such as these are dangerous, and have no purpose other than to intensify prejudices.

Branding Israel as an "Apartheid" state is equally detrimental. An "Apartheid" government is one that grants basic rights only to those in power. This does not define the Israeli government, which has 120 Knesset seats available to all Israeli citizens: Arabs, Jews, Christians, Moslems, Druze, etc.

If you have swallowed the dogma that Israel is an "Apartheid" state, go there and see for yourself. Notice hospital waiting rooms where Israeli citizens, Jews and Palestinians, equally enjoy the benefits of health care. Is this treatment available to Blacks in South Africa? Sit down at a cafe in Haifa where Israeli citizens, Jews and Palestinians, sip their coffee side by side. Can this be found in South Africa?

ISRAEL IS NOT AN APARTHEID STATE.

We sympathize with the cause and suffering of the Palestinian people — but not at the expense of the destruction of Israel.

Art show review possibly sexist

The Collegian published an art review by Steve Clark ("Faculty art impressive," May 9) in which he reviewed an exhibition of works by 22 members of the UMass art faculty currently on view at the R. Michelson Gallery in downtown Amherst.

Of the 22 artists in the show, he took the trouble to name 11 of them and commented on one or several of their works. I was pleased to be among those mentioned.

It was heartening to encounter an art reviewer who not only acknowledges the existence of computer art, but is willing to feature it prominently at the beginning of a review.

But there's a fly in the ointment.

Why, among the 11 artists he mentioned, did he fail to notice any of the six talented women in the exhibition or refer to any of their work, several of which were truly outstanding, and in my view better, than some of the work that attracted his attention?

And how could he fail to see that the quality of this overlooked work was at least up to that of the show as a whole, contributing to the "impressive variety" already mentioned and to the overall aura of success of the show?

The six artists I am referring to are Eleese Brown, Jeanette Cole, Copper Giloth, Jusan Jahoda, Nancy LaPointe, and Rozanne Retz — all of them talented and accomplished professionals.

Is this sexism at work — sexism in the pages of the Collegian no less? I'm afraid so.

Yet, since Clark's approach to the show is basically sound, he shows promise as an art reviewer.

Blindly grouping all Latinos wrong

Although Tomas Garcia's article ("The Conquistadorean lineage divides Latinos," May 9) makes some very important points about the way Latinos, and all minorities, are treated in this country, he inadvertently falls into the blind discrimination he professes to hate.

He is calling for the unity of all Latin Americans on this campus and the world. He criticizes the fighting between Puerto Ricans, Cubans, El Salvadorans, etc., and states that this fighting is "divisive and detrimental to our community's unity."

Garcia blindly, as many North Americans do, groups together all Latin American countries as though they were one. Every Latin American country has its own distinctive culture, history, customs, etc., which distinguish one from the other.

Why does Garcia believe that there should be a "communal unity" among the Central and South American nations? Is it because they speak Spanish? I hope this is not the essence of his argument because if it is, it demonstrates a lack of historical knowledge.

With respect to Garcia's line "there are those of us who believe that they are white (meaning Latinos)," there are people in Latin America who are "white." They are Spanish and immigrant European Whites.

Finally, the "stinking, snobbish mentality" of the wealthy is not epidemic to just the U.S. and the Latin American elites; it is predominant in every single society, as are class divisions.

Diagnosing Clay as homophobic and offensive deemed judgmental

In response to "Andrew Dice Clay Captiviting the Heart of America" (Meredith O'Brien, May 15), I find it quite ironic that Ms. O'Brien is asking us to ignore "The Dice Man" while simultaneously advertising for him by writing about him.

News reports on Monday told viewers that this week's Saturday Night Live Show got it's highest rating all year due to media attention such as this.

In addition, Ms. O'Brien finds it within her right to label both Mr. Clay and his viewers.

Yes, Clay is offensive to a lot of us.

However, without a degree in Psychology diagnosing him as homophobic (by definition a homophobic person has homosexual tendancies; however, as a result of a repression is acting out in reaction formation) seems altogether rash.

Putting all of his viewers in one category as "sick" also seems a bit judgmental.

Ms. O'Brien, fortunately, our First Amendment rights do not end where your opinions start.

Use of styrofoam hypocritical

It has come to our attention that University Food Services is still using styrofoam in the Campus Center.

According to Robert W. Lenz, of the Polymer Engineering Department, "Normal styrofoam does not break down in the sun." Furthermore, chloroflourocarbons are released into the atmosphere through the manufacturing of styrofoam. These CFCs act to break down the ozone layer in our atmosphere. Repercussions of this process includes an increase in the UV radiation absorbed by our earth's surface. Consequently, skin cancer and other various mutations will occur in living organisms.

It is hypocritical for UMass to wholly support Earth Day and to continue to buy products which are not biodegradable.

The unavailability of space in our landfills is becoming a greater problem each year. UMass contributes to this problem by purchasing styrofoam, which could otherwise be easily substituted with recyclable and non-throwaway containers.

We refuse to see the logic behind UMass's continual usage of these harmful products and its disregard for the detrimental, long-term effects of styrofoam in our atmosphere and our health.

Support investment in our future

During this time of scarce public funds, public education is suffering.

This year, the Bush administration's proposed FY91 budget recommends a $458 million reduction in Guaranteed Student Loans for higher education, and the Pell Grant's proposed increase would not keep up with inflation.

Translated into human terms, fewer students will be allowed to attend college next year which also means a loss of human potential.

But there is one step that can be taken to save higher education, before it becomes an exclusive club for the rich, without spending dollars we do not seem to have.

Silvio Conte has proposed a bill in the U.S. House of Representatives that would create "a program of tax-free education savings accounts to help parents save up for the expensive college years." This program would help our children by planning early, thanks to government financial incentives to save.

Please urge your congressional representative to support this sound, frugal investment in our future.

Column generalizes sexism

In response to the column, "Recognizing the roots of sexism" (Minu Sebastian, May 14) I would like to express my outrage. The article unfairly depicts all traditional Indian fathers as sexists.

When my entire family moved here from India 18 years ago, my parents confronted a problem which many first-generation parents face. They must assimilate their traditional beliefs into the American lifestyle.

Sebastian stated that she "was not treated as an individual who has the ability and intelligence to make decisions for herself." Since when did children start getting along with their parents? Some complain in silence and others in a more noticeable manner. In many traditions, children don't always agree with their parents' resolutions.

As long as I live with my parents, I must abide by their rules. I don't see anything unfair about that.

Furthermore, Sebastian states that "they (traditional Indian fathers) have no respect for any point of view which differs from their own." The same statement can be used against the children.

The column also generalizes that traditional Indian mothers are submissive to their husbands and because of this submission they can't be supportive of their children.

Throughout my life, the only time my mother doesn't support my brother or me is when she agrees with my father. Because she agrees with my father doesn't mean that she's submissive.

My parents aren't the only exceptions to the generalization. My friends' parents and my relatives are also exceptions. I admit that the people I have spoken about are quite small compared to the overall population of India.

Sebastian's generalizations seem to stem from her parents and her friends' parents. Again, this is not a fair sampling of the population.

The article seemed to be a grievance against her parents, especially her father. Traditional Indian parents are similar to parents of other traditions. In general, as long as their children live under their household, parents require them to abide by their rules. As long as children disobey their parents, there will always be disagreements between the two.

SWAG acted irresponsibly for ignoring best interests of community

I find it disturbingly ironic that the Southwest Area Government and the people involved in SWAG make campus concerts a major political issue, and try to align themselves with the successful production of these, when they have done much to damage them.

To say that it is the Union Production Council who are responsible for the SWAG decision to pull out of the Spring Concert '90 is preposterous. This was their baby all along, and to attempt to put the blame on us is unfortunate.

UPC wasn't informed of SWAG's decision to bail out until at least a week and a half had expired after they had made it. There were four concerts they had, whether or not they are legitiamate is debatable.

First, we never said we would definitely get the Stadium. We tried very hard, but were unsuccessful. SWAG indicated from the start of our plan they would still be a part of the concert even if it was on the pond.

Secondly, we never had a plan to get one big act, and haven't the slightest idea where they would have gotten that idea. However, we had indicated that we would be able to get much bigger talent than has historically been the case. I don't think that we failed in that respect. Spring concert '90 was hardly a showcase of no-names. Also booking talent is contingent upon the availability of bands. U2 and REM are not on tour, for instance.

Thirdly, we gave each of the area governments the opportunity to help us select talent and work alongside us in the production of the concert from the onset. To say it was we who closed the channels of communication is false. It is they who never returned phone calls, they who never kept in touch.

Finally, SWAG was concerned about the acts that we were bringing. However, they didn't know who the acts were, until after they pulled out. They were substantiating their gripes based on rumors that certain bands were coming.

Further, SGA concert fund is just that, the SGA's. SWAG did not give us anything from their concert fund, the SGA did. Also, it is ludicrous to say the SGA is eliminating student events, when the budget for the coming fiscal year is geared toward expanding the funds for a variety of RSOs, which will likely lead to even more programming than ever.

SWAG can do whatever they like with their money. But it is interesting that SWAG was the only area government to have problems with UPC, and it is SWAG who have acted irresponsibly, ignoring the best interests of the UMass community.

"This is the third time in probably 28 years that we have had an international boycott of California grapes," De La Cruz said.

According to De La Cruz there are three major goals that the United Farm Workers' want to achieve through the boycott. They want to stop the use of five deadly pesticides used in the growing of grapes, they want to set up a marketing agreement with industry whereby the union and manufacturers test the food before sending it to market, and they want guaranteed free and fair union elections.

De La Cruz said the conditions farm workers must work in are extremely poor. A farm worker has a life expectancy of 49 years as opposed to the average life expectancy of 75 years, he said, noting that 300,000 farm workers are poisoned each year and 1.5 million children work on farms.

"We as farm workers have become society's canaries,"said De La Cruz referring to the use of canaries in coal mines to determine if there was enough oxygen.

educational materials are lacking, he said.

Yesterday, between 75 and 100 books were donated, he said. The AFL-CIO in Washington D.C. plans to send the learning materials to Poland and maybe some other eastern European countries, he said.

"I am hopeful that this will be helpful," O'Donnell said. "I feel useful in that I am helping someone."

"Instead of students wasting books that they would not use again, they can donate them to students very interested in them."

The English language has rapidly become the dominant language in world affairs. If they don't have English words to read, they'll never learn the language," O'Donnell said.

"I'm glad I can help out. It's something I can do to help the situation in eastern Europe," Lee said.

To: University Community

From: Mental Health Services

Anyone reading the Collegian regularly is aware that there have been several deaths in the UMass community this year. Most of us don't think about loss or death until we are forced to by circumstance and it's never easy to talk about the subject. If you or friends of yours knew one of the students involved then obviously the impact is immediate and strong. But even if you don't have any personal connection to the deaths you may feel affected by them particularly if you've experienced a major loss in your own life. Understanding the mourning process might help you gain perspective on your own feelings or be helpful to a friend.

The stages of grief are commonly identified as shock/denial, anger, grief, and acceptance. The process is complex and variable and no individual experiences each stage equally or exactly in the order described. Grief usually runs a course that we can divide into periods. The time frames are not absolute and will vary depending on the individuals and their relationships. The first phase occurs immediately after a loss and lasts about two weeks. Rituals, such as funerals or memorial services, are an important part of this time. During this phase people frequently stay home from school or work and need to be in close contact with family and/or community. The second phase can last as long as a year, sometimes longer. During this time people usually return to normal activities while continuing to experience the loss in many ways. People may be preoccupied with the person who died; they may express anger, resentment, and rage about the loss. Many people also feel guilty. Grieving and acceptance occur as people experience their feelings and review memories of the person who died and of the relationship. It helps to talk about these memories with friends or family. People frequently have an anniversary effect in which they re-experience some of the emotions they felt during the grief period. This can occur at the same time of the year as the original loss or be triggered by an experience which brings up memories of the loss.

If you are in a position to help someone who is grieving, the most important thing you can do is provide a supportive and nurturing atmosphere in which the person can talk freely about their feelings.

Mourning and grief can be much more complicated when the death is from suicide. The feelings of anger and guilt might be more intense. There is frequently a lot of confusion and many questions that are difficult to answer. Why did they do it? Why didn't they say something? What cues did I miss?

Although suicide attempts are often a way of asking for help sometimes people who kill themselves give no cues. It's important to know that and hopefully minimize the second-guessing and guilt. It's also important to know that the cues a person does give are often subtle and difficult to recognize. A suicidal person usually feels trapped or helpless; and suicide, unfortunately, is one way they believe they can escape. A few common clues that someone is considering suicide are:

- discussing suicide or suicide methods
- withdrawing from others or changing long-time habits
- suddenly deciding to do something which suggests the person might be preparing to die such as making a will or giving away valued possessions.

People who have been seriously depressed or who have recently experienced a crisis of loss, failure, or frustration are particularly vulnerable.

If you are having suicidal thoughts it is important to get help by talking with friends, family, and trained professionals. If you are concerned about a friend here are some steps you can take:

- Listen carefully
- Ask about suicidal thoughts and plans
- Offer support as well as alternate ways to solve their problems.
- Help them find professional counseling. Don't try to be their therapist.

The Mental Health Division of UHS offers individual, short-term counseling. To make an appointment call 545-2337. If your concern feels too urgent to wait for an appointment there is an Urgent Care Clinic at 127 Hills North from 1:00-2:30, Monday through Friday. The Mental Health Division also provides 24 hour on-call emergency services. Weekdays between 8:00 - 5:00 call 545-2337. After-hours and on week-ends call 549-2671 and ask to speak to the Mental Health on-call clinician.

MULTICULTURAL AFFAIRS

A sullen spring 1990 semester

UMass President Duffey: self-appointed Middle East expert

It was a moody spring. The temperature oscillated randomly, like the moods of the thousands of denizens of Amherst. The atmosphere could be best described as sullen. The vast majority of the UMass populace continued to flaunt the time honored, quaint and utterly tiresome European-derived mannerisms that are frequently referred to as "All-American and wholesome college traditions."

In keeping with this legacy, most of the European community continued to pack bars and parties like sardines in a can. The only common denominator to these settings was the deafening music designed to stifle all intellectual inquiry.

Other Europeans were mesmerized by TV screens or computer terminals. Their would-be intellectuals discussed Kant, Nietzsche, the problems of the Third World and the joyous winds of "freedom" blowing over their continent. One was reminded of the last days of America's roaring twenties — the elites danced their way into the depression.

Enough said about the dominant community.

Students of color continued to experience the reality behind the facade of diversity. The tuition increases decimated their numbers. Many cannot afford to return this fall. Others suffered the academic consequences of not attending wealthy white suburban schools. Their grades plummeted, along with their aspirations.

Third World students continued to grapple with the realities of cultural alienation and financial instability. The greatest ordeal for them would lie in accepting the vast distances that separated them from parents and community in distant homes with majestic names like Lagos, Kuala Lumpur, Beijing and Calcutta.

Despite these grim realities, many students of color continued to compensate for the obsolescence and decadence of Euro-thinking by generating controversy and conflict, debate and dialogue, in a manner out of all proportion to their numbers.

This clash of ideas was a prophetic indicator of the shape of things to come on the campuses of the United States with the "browning of America." As conflict exploded in the Third World, even rustic Amherst felt the shock-waves.

In distant Cape Town, South Africa, Nelson Mandela walked out of almost three decades of incarceration, proud and defiant. Barely months later, Namibia triumphantly smashed Euro-colonial chains and joined the ranks of liberated Africa.

Meanwhile, the most important European in Amherst, Joseph Duffey, invited Mandela to visit that shining paragon of diversity — the University.

The best laid plans of mice and men can go awry. Little did the Administration Mafiosi know that their gross neglect and lack of commitment would be exposed within weeks of this cordial invitation. The revelation that UMass continued to invest almost five percent of its endowment funds in companies linked to Apartheid South Africa shocked and disgusted many.

Duffey and his cohorts lied, backtracked and obfuscated. They frantically assured the press that it was just an "oversight,"and behaved like the proverbial monkeys that heard, saw and said no evil. These antics cut no ice with many students of color who continued to ask disturbing questions.

If a random spot check of an investment portfolio yielded so much dirty laundry, how long had this scam been going on? How could the University rationalize gross neglect as "oversight"? Will the University only reform when conscientious students trap it in unbecoming conduct? Who will be punished for these violations?

The controversy over the South African investments took a bizarre twist when it was pointed out that University investments in Israeli state bonds potentially constituted a violation of the divestment policy on two grounds.

Firstly, Israel had legally instituted a barrage of racist laws against indigenous non-Jewish Palestinians, that could lead to its being classified as an apartheid state. Secondly, the State of Israel supplied lethal weapons to the white supremacists in South Africa, including nuclear and ballistic missile technology, as well as commercial, intelligence and political collaboration.

The unspeakable had been spoken. The "Israel can do no wrong" organizations on campus shed all their pretensions of being primarily cultural, and transformed into political offices of the Zionist State. Attempts were made to drown legitimate concerns about Israeli-style apartheid and Israel-South Africa connections in a storm of reactionary invective. A full page ad appeared in the Collegian. The Zionists rallied and cursed.

Events took an ominous turn. Palestinian students were physically assaulted and verbally abused. The Chancellor fueled the conflict by condemning these Palestinian groups, and misusing his office to propagate his own ignorance of the issue.

Meanwhile Palestinians were beaten and shot in the West Bank and Gaza. Encouraged by the influx of Soviet Jews into Israel, the Zionists opened illegal settlements in Occupied Palestine. The farce of Spring '90 seemed to exceed all limits of the imagination. Earlier in the semester, the administration covertly tried to transfer control of the supposedly autonomous cultural centers from one bureaucratic body to another without even bothering to inform, let alone consult the students that ran these centers.

Once again the administration was exposed. The familiar pattern was repeated. First deny, then frantically resort to copybook Whitmore damage control techniques. Honesty was the only casualty.

Within the communities of color, new challenges emerged. Some students dared to question the neo-colonial mentalities prevailing amidst their own. At long last, students of color attempted to resolve internal contradictions in the hope of strengthening progressive values.

An article was written on the sexism inherent in an utterly inappropriate European style fashion show held on "Asian Night." Neo-colonized elements gathered to condemn the author (ironically enough, an Asian-American woman) as being insecure, and advising her to take the path to salvation — be both White and Asian.

An analysis was made of the reality of the Vietnam war, and the consequences of the US secret involvement, brutal bombing and economic embargoes — namely economic chaos and migration. The author (ironically enough, Vietnamese) was condemned by similar reactionary elements as being an arrogant communist.

An African-American bluntly spelled out his understanding of the factors underlying a perceived weakness in his community. This led to a minor uproar. A healthy debate commenced, with some attempting to avoid the issues raised with personal invective, and others acknowledging the harsh realities, but urging positive solutions.

A Latin-American proceeded to do likewise, raising disturbing questions about race and class divisions within the Latin American community. He generated similar controversy, especially among bourgeoisie elements that attempted to arrogantly deny these realities, to the extent of objecting to the use of the Spanish word "gringo" to describe a European.

In the South Asian community the issue of Kashmir sparked off a hail of pseudo-nationalism among some Indians, who could not comprehend the reality of the misguided and brutal policy of repression being practiced by their government against Kashmiris.

Back in South Asia, the gravity of the issue was manifested in the gathering clouds of war along the India-Pakistan border.

Meanwhile, in Amherst, the Annual Funkathon held by African-American students led to the usual manic response by the local law enforcers. The Campus Center was flooded by nervous police who overreacted at every step. The entire campus center was sealed off from the student union building.

Perhaps the police wished to protect us from ourselves. Too many people of color in one location arouses paranoia.

As most students leave for white suburbia, Europe and other such fascinating summer resorts, the issues of the spring will continue to simmer.

The US continues to occupy Panama. Green Beret advisors have just set up Vietnam-style firebases in the mountains of Peru, using the "war against drugs" as a cover for a war against Marxist guerillas . . .

Not that these issues will distract many of you this summer. Enjoy yourselves. There is more to come this Fall.

UMass theater dept. whips up varied delicacies

By JOSH GALITSKY

Lunch in the Lobby Series
Rand Lobby
May 3-14

REVIEW

Every semester, the UMass theater department cooks up an assortment of dramatic delicacies to entertain and educate. There are the big production main courses, the special project snacks, and the directing class desserts which all provide nourishment for the hungry theater-goer.

The "Lunch in the Lobby Series" is one meal that gives theater majors a taste of the ingredients it takes to be a director.

This spring's series brought a delicious array of acting talent as well as directing aptitude. I chose three of the nine adaptations to see and they were as different and distinct from each other as are the four basic food groups.

84 Charing Cross Road, directed by Russell Edward Reinke is the chronicle of a 20-year transatlantic love affair by mail. Actress Teresa O'Brien was touching and emotional as the rough-edged Helene. Kenneth Roberts portrayed British aura with cool composure and steady grace. Catherine Cope was sparkling as the sunny and sweet Nora.

Letters came alive and developed real relationships. The actors themselves possessed great awareness of their surroundings while reading from scripts. The directing of this piece was clever and committed, as the interaction between people, oceans apart, was focused, funny, and fun to watch.

Jerrie's Shakespeare Pizza, directed by Dan Miller, was a side-splitting ensemble effort starring Tom Berry, Zach Galvin, Bill Larkin, Marissa Matrone, Amy Spanger, and Kristie Tincher. Miller let his actors run, skip, and jump with improved skits and a wild-and-wooly-wingin'-it approach to much of the piece.

The large crowd was in hysterics from beginning to end as the group turned, twisted, and tortured the Shakespeare classics into rip-roaring raps, riotious readings, and ridiculous retorts. The group played with crowd members, teased Shakespeare's characters, and physicalized the funny bones of everyone in attendance.

In The Awakening, directed by Stuart W. Gamble, we saw a young woman's quest for sexual freedom. Straying from Kate Chopin's version somewhat, Gamble added some interesting comedy bits.

Pat Malone did an outstanding job as Edna Pontillier using wonderful facial gestures and physicalizations to create her character. Todd Groemling played three different characters and was strongest as Alcee. Beth Blickers, cast on her leg and all, played three characters quite well, her strongest role being Mlle. Reisz.

The scene between Edna and Mlle. Reisz was electric and at last sent this piece into motion. This one scene made the drowning at the end, a shivering, shuddering event to witness.

The Silent Pool, directed by Halina Radosz, was steady. It is an adaptation portraying the relationship between author/playwright J.M. Barrie and his adopted son Michael. Although the pace was a tad slow, the piece was still rather tender.

Sean Cloherty was excellent as Michael, showing the progression from childhood to young adult with convincing vitality and honesty. Richard Fung was gradual and thoughtful as Barrie in the present and David Jarrat was sentimental and caring as Barrie in the past.

The hard work of all of the students involved certainly payed off, constructing a clever, creative cuisine that all could, and most certainly did, enjoy.

Art of 'Lost and Found uncovers message for all

If you were trying to relax in the sun outside the Student Union yesterday, you probably noticed "Lost and Found," the large "trash sculpture" spanning the length of the steps.

"Lost and Found" was created by graduate student, Chris Dobbs. Dobbs, who is studying art, collected the trash he found on campus, and separately taped each piece to the Student Union steps.

"These items were found on campus over the past few days," the sign at one end of the sculpture said.

"It took about four hours to collect the trash and three to four hours to tape it down," Dobbs explained.

Student reaction to the sculpture was mixed.

"It's interesting how people just walk right by it," said Andrea Canty, a junior Hotel/Restaurant/Travel Administration major. "At first I didn't even notice it, with all the other trash around."

According to Dobbs, the purpose of the sculpture is to make a statement about the amount of litter around campus.

"It's a good idea; it definitely makes a statement," Jodi Avery, a junior Psychology major said. "But if it's not cleaned up by tommorrow, the trash may end up in the exact same place."

"If I can't get permission to restore it and keep it around an extra day, I plan on cleaning it up this afternoon and taking the papers to be recycled," Dobbs said.

"It's pretty ironic if it angers anyone that it's blowing around, because that's where it came from in the first place."

"It certainly makes its point," said sophomore English major Grace Sullivan.

"If it gets one person to stop littering, I think it was successful," Dobbs said.

Another view of 'Pretty Woman'

'Rich work-a-holic meets street-smart woman.' Pretty Woman with Richard Gere and Julia Roberts had all the potential to be another sappy love story and it was — almost.

The difference between this movie and other love stories is that it has a certain freshness and humor.

The chemistry between Gere and Roberts manifests itself with a collection of funny-one-liners. Originality came from the fact that their humor was not forced.

Another strong point in the movie was that it attempts to break down the stereotypes of the typical corporate raider. Gere could not be hated in this movie because of his geniality. Both Roberts and Gere congeal well, regardless of their class differences. Gere could not condescend to Roberts' child-like innocence.

'Spectrum' art magazine publishes '89-'90 issue

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

Spectrum magazine issue for 1989-90 will be distributed through that office in room 406E of the Student Union tomorrow.

According to Managing Editor-elect Heather Bell, the magazine was slated to go out today but a printer malfunction pushed the date back.

"It was a situation beyond our control, but it's going to be distributed to campus Thursday," Bell said. She said there is a possibility a table will be set up on the Campus Center Concourse to hand out the free publication.

Spectrum is a fine arts and literature magazine begun in 1967. Its purpose is to give a balanced presentation of undergraduate students' work, as well as a sampling of graduate students' work Bell said.

"It is entirely student run from top to bottom. There are six editorial positions: poetry, prose, art, photo, managing and production. Spectrum is published once a year in a four-color glossy format," Bell explained. "We do our own lay-out and paste-up also."

Apparently, '89-'90 saw a phenomenal amount of participation from the student body, and Bell said the staff is extremely pleased with all the submissions.

She said the magazine has never missed a year of printing since 1967 with the exception of the '88-'89 because it was the 20th Anniversary issue, and this resulted in a later print date.

Bell said "anyone and everyone" is invited to submit works for next year, they can be dropped off in mailbox 126 Student Union.

In the fall, Spectrum will be hosting poetry and prose writing and reading workshops.

Murphy, Bellotti face tough debate

By JONATHAN YENKIN
The Associated Press

BOSTON — Evelyn Murphy and Francis X. Bellotti, who will battle for victory next month in the state Democratic convention, sharply attacked each other Monday night in a debate among the party's gubernatorial candidates.

Murphy, the lieutenant governor, tried repeatedly to knock Bellotti for acting as a lobbyist after he left the attorney general's office in 1986. But Bellotti said Murphy was speaking "quarter truths," and he defended his work as a private lawyer since leaving state government four years ago.

The debate, sponsored by WBZ-TV and The Boston Globe, marked the first time all four Democratic candidates debated at once. On Monday, WBZ and the Globe released a poll showing the Democratic race tightening, with a virtual three-way tie between Bellotti, Murphy, and John Silber, who is on leave as Boston University president.

State Rep. John Flood (D-Canton) was far behind in the poll as well as in the battle to collect delegates for the June 1 Democratic convention.

Murphy and Bellotti have been the leaders in gaining delegates, while Silber also hopes to achieve the 15 percent support necessary to appear on the September primary ballot.

BOSTON — THE STATE'S HIGHEST COURT AGREED Tuesday to a new trial for a man found guilty of indecent assault and battery on a child but not guilty of rape because of comments court officers made to the jury.

The court upheld a lower court's order granting a new trial to Daniel Solis, whose attorney learned of the court officer's remarks in conversation with a juror after the trial.

A court officer told the jurors that they could not obtain a transcripts of the child's testimony, and that they would have to use their collective memory of the evidence to resolve any conflict, the Supreme Judicial Court said in its decision.

MANCHESTER — BEGINNING JULY 1, THIS NORTH SHORE town will officially be known as Manchester-by-the-Sea.

The fight of lifelong resident Edward F. Corley, 67, to change the town's name to Manchester-by-the-Sea was endorsed 658-625 Monday in the annual town election.

Corley, a former town employee and selectman, claimed that most people, particularly residents, already know the town as Manchester-by-the-Sea. He said it would avoid confusion with Manchester, N.H., inland and about 30 miles to the north.

BEVERLY — A $35,000, FIVE-FOOT HIGH WOODEN STATUE of a punk rocker raising the middle finger of one hand defiantly in the air was recovered on the 13th green of the Beverly Golf and Tennis Club, police said.

The statue, which members of the Beverly Police Department Criminal Investigation Division described as "almost lifelike," had been missing from a courtyard at the officers of New England Biolabs Inc. since April 9, when it was reported stolen, said Police Capt. John A. Cassola.

A greens keeper at the golf course reported finding the statue shortly after 9 a.m. Monday, Cassola said.

"It's a beautiful statue," Cassola said. "It's like the Bobby Orr statue, but it's a terrible subject."

22 days by her boyfriend or husband, the services provided by Necessities are very important, she said. Last year 400 hundred women used the organization's services and 1,000 hotline calls were answered.

Stinson said it is difficult to get funding for general operating costs. "People will pay for food for women in the shelter but it's very hard to find people to pay for operations."

Stinson said there are many ways people can help Necessities through this budget crisis. People can contribute money, help us fund-raise, and join our volunteer training that starts May 31, she said. The Senate is now looking at a tax package that would restore the cuts that are being posed. It would also be very helpful if people would call their senators urging them to support the tax package in support of battered women's centers, she said.

Bush, Blacks discuss 'civil rights litmus test'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush met with Black leaders yesterday in search of compromise on a job discrimination bill that NAACP Executive Director Benjamin Hooks called a litmus test of Bush's commitment to civil rights.

The White House softened the veto threat that the Justice Department aimed at the bill last month but still expressed misgivings about what it regards as hiring quotas imbedded in the legislation.

Bush spent more than an hour with the Black leaders — twice as long as planned. Hooks and others said afterward they agreed to have their top legal advisers meet with Attorney General Dick Thornburgh, Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights John Dunne and White House counsel Boyden Gray to search for a middle ground.

"The president would like to sign a civil rights bill, and we will be working toward that end," White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said before the meeting. "We are not repeating" the veto threat, he said.

But Drew Days 3rd, a Yale Law School professor who was the Carter administration's top civil rights lawyer, said, "There is a tremendous gap that has to be bridged."

The administration agrees with the civil rights establishment that some of last year's Supreme Court rulings that narrowed minority workers' rights in job discrimination cases should be reversed.

But the Bush administration does not want to go as far as the bill now before Congress or give women some protections that minorities have. Bush has backed efforts to reverse two high court rulings; the civil rights leaders want to undo six.

Hooks called it "a question of paramount importance to the Black community."

"The civil rights bill, in my judgment, will become a litmus test" for the president, who has "a tremendous popularity" among Blacks, Hooks said.

John Jacob, president of the National Urban League, said Bush "has used the White House as a bully pulpit to preach justice and fairness and equality, and we saw this legislation as an opportunity to put into action" those words.

Alixe Glen, a deputy White House spokeswoman, said: "There is room for negotiation . . . there are certain principles that won't change."

The White House remains concerned that the legislation would put a burden of the proof on employers "so great that the only way of staying out of court is to have a quota," she said.

Bush will hold two more listening sessions tomorrow with leaders of Hispanic groups, Asian-Americans, women, religious organizations and the disabled. White House Chief of Staff John Sununu is meeting separately with business and labor groups.

Arthur Fletcher, the chairman of the U.S. Commission of Civil rights defended the bill, saying: "It's not a quota."

"You're talking to the person who wrote the Philadelphia plan, who put goals, targets and timetables in the first plan that was ever issued 20 years ago," said Fletcher, a former assistant secretary of Labor in the Nixon administration.

"A quota is a flat number that has to be satisfied irrespective of whether the person can do the job. ... All businesses pursue goals," said Fletcher.

Robert Woodson, a Black conservative, emerged from the White House attacking both the bill and the Bush administration's own alternative.

Woodson, president of the National Center for Neighborhood EEnterprise, accused Hooks and his colleagues of using "the conditions of the Black poor to justify civil rights and affirmative action remedies that do not benefit poor Blacks."

Woodson said Bush should "go back to the drawing boards and really construct legislation that addresses the critical needs of people whose brains are being blown out in these inner cities."

Video games under scrutiny at MIT

CAMBRIDGE (AP) — The nimble little Nintendo men who dodge bad guys to rescue the princess now have a bigger prize to catch: the approval of parents wary and spent by the video game craze.

As an inducement, the Japanese toymaker has made a $3 million gift to the Media Lab at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology for its ongoing research into how children can learn while they play, the school announced Tuesday.

The gift to establish the Nintendo Fund will back the work of Seymour Papert, a mathematician and pioneer in artificial intelligence who directs learning research at the Media Lab.

What underlies his approach to work-plus-play equals learning, is a phrase he learned from children, Papert said in an interview.

"Children says: I like that because it's hard fun."

"Fun does not have to be easy. Real play can be painful, but it also has this element of fun and engagement and it's something you want to do."

In his work at MIT, Papert said, "We do a lot of work on how new technologies allow us to think differently about learning. One of the criticisms of school I've made is that it's not connected to children's real lives, what they're really interested in."

Papert is widely known for his invention of a computer language called Logo. Used in about a third of the country's elementary schools, Logo allows children to program computers.

Research performed at MIT could be used to develop new Nintendo games, which are already played in 40 million homes worldwide, half of them the United States. MIT is not prevented, however, from devising new games itself, Papert said.

With an estimated 90 percent of children of video-game age playing Nintendo, the market seems about saturated. A new angle could give sales a boost.

But so far, intentionally educational software for kids doesn't seem to sell as well as the sort regarded as pure fun. Educational games rang up sales of about $350 million last year compared with the $3.5 billion in video games sold.

Making more educational models of Nintendo could also ease parents' worries over the intense attraction the games hold for their children and a tendency to dismiss them as useless diversions.

Five Operation Rescue protestors arrested after defying recent Supreme Court decision

By SONYA ROSS
The Associated Press

ATLANTA (AP) — Five Operation Rescue anti-abortion protesters were arrested today after they entered an abortion clinic and chained themselves together, defying a court order upheld this week by the U.S. Supreme Court.

Police were called to the Atlanta Surgi-Center and arrested the five after cutting their chains. Maj. W. W. Holley said they would be charged with criminal trespass and said information about the violation of the order would be turned over to the court.

An Operation Rescue spokeswoman, Jane Shepherd, said the protest was not a response to Monday's U.S. Supreme Court decision to uphold the court-ordered ban on demonstrations by the group within 50 feet of any Atlanta abortion clinic. But she acknowledged that it violated that ban, imposed by a Superior Court Judge in Atlanta.

"When we do a rescue in the city, it does not matter whether there's an injunction or not," she said.

Monday's Supreme Court decision came on Operation Rescue's emergency appeal of the lower court ruling, but the appeal was rejected on a close 5-4 vote. The group's members had argued that the Atlanta injunction violated their free speech rights.

The clinic's director, Beth Petzelt, said the protesters pushed their way into the clinic about 8:30 a.m. as patients were being admitted and scuffled with four or five staff members who tried to keep them out.

Hoop Hall finds a Pearl; inducts three other stars

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — The wait was long, but Earl Monroe, whose electrifying spins and jukes paved the way for other men nicknamed "Magic" just smiled yesterday and savored his induction to the Basketball Hall of Fame.

Also enshrined were Elvin Hayes, Dave Bing and the late Neil Johnston, the Philadelphia Warriors' hook-shot artist who led the NBA in scoring three consecutive seasons in the 1950s.

The four join 168 individuals and four teams in the Hall of Fame in this city where basketball was born nearly a century ago.

Monroe, voted NBA rookie of the year with Baltimore in 1968 and then a key to the New York Knicks 1973 championship team, was passed over by Hall voters three times and had become so discouraged that "I just stopped thinking about it."

But not even a dispute, which led to the resignation of Bob Cousy as president of the Hall of Fame, over whether the executive committee should have called for a second vote when no one was elected on the first ballot, could dim Monroe's sense of satisfaction.

"I'm kind of an even-keeled individual and when I first heard I had been elected to the Hall of Fame, I didn't have that much of a reaction," Monroe said. "The emotion has been building and last night I couldn't sleep. I feel as fulfilled now as I ever have."

"It's times like this when you start to miss the game," said Monroe, who became known as "The Pearl" in the pros, but whose first nickname was "Magic" at Winston-Salem State, where he averaged 41.5 points per game.

"No one had seen a guy like me play, but they got used to it. When I came to the pros they called me flashy and a hot dog. They never understood that I was never overly big and I needed to use my guile," Monroe said. "In high school I was a 6-3 center so I had some experience backing guys down."

During his 12 pro seasons, he averaged 18.8 points a game and was named to four All-Star teams as well as the NBA's Golden Anniversary squad.

He is the sixth player on the 1973 Knicks to be enshrined. Coach Red Holzman and team president Ned Irish are also in the Hall.

"This is something that a lot of young men, and now young women, grow up dreaming about," said Bing. "That dream has culminated into reality today and I'm very proud."

And the thoughts of the Syracuse star, who was rookie of the year in 1966-67 with the Detroit Pistons and averaged 20 points and nearly six assists over his 12-year professional career, turned to his teammates and the playgrounds of Washington, D.C.

"After playing for hours and hours you would get to hang out with the older guys and they would talk about basketball and the history of the game in Washington and our playground," he recalled. "And you would have a sense of belonging and tradition."

Hayes, who grew into one of the best power forwards in the game and the third leading scorer in NBA history, also talked about kids' dreams "and walking into a gym in Rayville, La., in eighth grade, not knowing what a guard was and having the coach say "Hey, you're going to be a guard and running all around the basketball court getting in everyone's way.' "

"It's a long road," said Hayes, who averaged 21 points and nearly 12.5 rebounds a game during his 16-year professional career and was named to 12 All-Star teams.

Hayes says that it's only been in the last month or so that he has taken the time to reflect on his career and he still has trouble picturing himself as the man in the film clips.

"I really don't believe I did those things . . . that I could have scored all those points and got those rebounds," he said. "To tell you the truth, my greatest fear every year I played was that I would be cut and wouldn't make the team."

■ Gorillas host Brown today

There's no guarantee that today's game will be anything like that one. But UMass is going to have to avoid allowing Brown those dominating runs to stay in the game.

Brown started to take control of the play when coach Dom Starsia went with sophomore attack Andrew Towers on faceoffs. Towers, who has won 28 of 38 draws he has taken this season, helped guide the Bruins back into contention.

"People always ask me why I don't use [senior midfielder Tim Soudan] on faceoffs," Garber said. "Soudo's a good faceoff guy, but it takes a lot out of you."

UMass had no trouble generating offense in the last game, shelling goalie Steven Ayers (11.18 goals against average) into hibernation before the end of the third quarter.

It's never been a secret that the Gorillas like to run and gun. Junior attack Jim McAleavey is second in the nation in scoring with 88 points (33 goals, 55 assists). Senior attack Rob Codignotto has 48 goals to go along with 22 assists, while senior attack Scott Hiller (31-17-48) and Soudan (29-16-45) are also dominating offensive threats.

Defensively, UMass has had its problems at times this season, and Brown will be looking to exploit that today.

Sophomore attack Darren Lowe leads the Bruins attack with a McAleavey-like 82 points on 23 goals and 59 assists. Towers is the big gun with 55 goals along with 16 assists, supported by senior midfielder Rich Tuohey (44-9-53) and junior midfielder Jay McMahon (27-11-38).

Garber has toyed with the idea of maybe playing slow-down, similar to what Cornell did in a recent 11-8 win over Brown.

"But that affects our guys, too," Garber said.

Instead, it will simply be to stress the basics, to stay with the game plan and not go haywire on offense. Patience will be the key.

"I just hope we don't underestimate them because we beat them last time," Garber said.

Gorilla Grumblings (the last version): Brown was ranked as high as fourth during the regular season, but dropped from that perch after consecutive losses to UMass and Cornell to end the season.

The winner of today's game travels to Syracuse on Sunday. Game time for that clash with the top-seeded Orangemen won't be determined until either today or tomorrow.

Idle thought: Had the NCAA acted upon the recommendation of the coaches and seeded UMass seventh, the Gorillas probably would have been hosting either Johns Hopkins (the actual No. 7 seed), Princeton or Rutgers today.

Not much difference there, but in the quarterfinals UMass (assuming a win today, of course) would have traveled to Yale instead of Syracuse. And that's a big difference, folks.

Three other first-round games are going on today on various parts of the East Coast.

Down the Mass Pike, fifth-ranked Harvard will take on Western entry and 12th seed Notre Dame. No. 10 Princeton face No. 7 Johns Hopkins in Baltimore, and No. 6 Virginia hosts No. 11 Rutgers.

The University Health Center is located in the central residential living area. We are here to help you with your health problems and concerns and work with you so that you can maintain and improve your health.

★ Emergency care is available 24 hours a day, but please, only come after hours if you have a true emergency (an ailment or injury that is life-threatening). Whenever possible please call ahead (or call if you are not sure if your condition is an emergency). Regular clinic hours are 8:00 am to 5:00 pm, Monday through Friday.

★ Other services include comprehensive eye and dental care. These operate on a fee for service basis or with a co-payment for some services for plan members. Dental hours are Monday through Friday, 8:30 am to 5:00 pm. The Eye Clinic is open 8:00 am to 5:00 pm, Monday through Friday.

★ Mental Health (127 Hills North) is available for counseling services. Appointments are encouraged.

★ The pharmacy, where you can fill most prescriptions from a UHS physician for a $5, $7, or $15 co-payment, also sells many over the counter medications and health aids. The Pharmacy is open 8:30 am to 5:00 pm, Monday through Friday.

★ Health Education (R. 250) is the place to go for information on any health-related topic.

★ While the in-patient unit is closed for the summer, should you need hospitalization, you can receive care at Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton. You must receive a referral from a UHS physician.

For the class of '94, transfer, and graduate students and students arriving from abroad.

★ If you are on campus for an orientation, or just visiting, remember to fill out and return your Health History Questionnaire, especially the section on your immunization status. If you need a new form or assistance, the Medical Records office on the first floor can help you.

★ Please get acquainted with UHS and the many health promotion programs that occur. There are great opportunities for students to work with the UHS through the peer education programs (academic credit is available) and the Student Health Advisory Board. Call the Health Education office.

Paying for care at UHS.

★ There is a summer health plan for students at any of the five colleges who are staying in the area for the summer. The cost is $97.50 and covers routine visits and a number of other services. If you've missed the deadline (June 1, 1990) you can still enroll, although coverage does not begin until the day of enrollment. Brochures describing the plan and enrollment forms are available in the cashier's office.

★ Health care for persons attending conferences on campus is available. Contact Conference Services at 545-2591.

★ Visiting faculty and their families may purchase a Visiting Scholar Plan. See the UHS Cashier for more information.

★ Recent graduates...if you are staying in the local area and want to extend your coverage, contact the Cashier's Office about the Basic Summer Health Plan, the Student Extension Plan and Kaiser Permanente Community Enrollment.

Friends and rivals reunite in Stanley Cup finals

BOSTON (AP) — Harry Sinden likes to tell the story about the time he discovered Glen Sather.

Sinden was a young defenseman in those days, and Sather an even younger forward.

"He once went around me," Sinden said. "I figured if he could beat me like that, then the Boston Bruins should draft him."

The Bruins did, and Sather eventually proved to be a useful player for them in the late 1960s. However, it's as a coach and general manager that Sather has made his mark in hockey.

Just like Sinden.

Sather, the general manager of the Edmonton Oilers, is one year removed as the coach of the four-time NHL champions. For most of the past 20 years, Sinden has been the architect of the Bruins, one of the NHL's most successful teams.

With the Oilers facing the Bruins in the Stanley Cup, which began last night, their past — and present — is inextricably linked.

"We go way back," Sinden said. "I knew Glen when he was just a young kid. He was always a pretty good hockey player — not a big goal scorer, but a tough, hard-nosed player."

Sinden, in fact, coached Sather in Oklahoma City in the Central Hockey League in the early 1960s. Sinden was a player-coach then and later coached Sather in Boston.

"You know, there are just some people you get along with better than others," Sinden said. "It's always been like that with me and Glen."

The two were almost always competing. At Oklahoma City, they used to play touch football and have foot races.

"I won't tell you who won," Sinden said.

The two even find a competitive edge while fishing. They generally do that every summer up in Canada's Northwest Territories, where Sinden said they go after "Arctic Char."

Each one has a bigger fish story to tell when they get back.

"I taught Glen a lot about fishing," Sinden said, smiling.

Rather, it's probably the other way around. Sather is the more serious fisherman and more the likely taught Sinden a thing or two about that sport.

The joke between the two is that Sather catches them and Sinden cooks 'em.

"I do pride myself on my cooking," Sinden said. "I think I'm pretty good."

As a general manager, Sinden has few peers. After coaching the Bruins to the Stanley Cup in 1970, their first in 29 years, he was responsible for building the Bruins into a consistent contender.

With Sinden at the helm for most of that time, the Bruins clicked off 23 consecutive winning seasons — the longest such current streak in pro sports. Aside from the Cup, Sinden was in charge when the Bruins won five conference championships and seven divisional titles.

Sather has had even more success in a shorter time. In the 10-year period since 1980, the Oilers won four Cups and visited the finals five times with Sather as the coach. Sather relinquished the job to John Muckler this past season, and the beat goes on for Edmonton.

"Slats was brilliant about fazing himself out," Oiler defenseman Kevin Lowe said. "He gave John more say gradually and naturally. It's not an easy transition."

Back for his sixth visit to the finals in eight years, Sather said, "it really isn't any different, except I'm not behind the bench.

"We have been together for a lot of years and when I watch the game now I generally have the feeling that he [Muckler] has. I'm just not experiencing everything. I do miss hockey sometimes."

Sinden then joked he's already done enough for Sather.

"Glen had great coaching here in Boston and met his wife here," Sinden said. "I don't know if we have to do any more for Glen at this point."

ball, basketball and lacrosse, and that is sometimes reflected on these pages. But that doesn't mean the track, tennis, water polo or other teams don't work just as hard or don't deserve equal billing. I've tried. I hope I was successful.

* * *

I don't know why I became a sports writer. It definitely wasn't something I chased after ever since I was a child.

When I was four or five years old, I wanted to drive a garbage truck. No kidding. I had a Tonka garbage truck that I used to play with in my garage and in my backyard sandbox.

I never even gave it much thought when my fourth grade English teacher handed back one of my earliest writings and told me in all honesty, "You're going to be a writer someday."

Looking back, I got my start in journalism back in 1980. My next door neighbor had a paper route, with about 45 customers scattered across town. After school, we'd split the deliveries. But now I realize how dumb I was to let him make all the money.

Even into high school, I entertained thoughts of other professions. I remember I wanted to be a pharmacist, among other things. I'm glad that phase passed quietly.

Then one day, the ambition must have come to me. Someone pointed out not too long ago that it was clearly spelled out in my blurb in my senior yearbook:

"To have my own sports column and become a major league first base coach."

I'm not sure if I'll ever get to satisfy the latter part of that quest. Hopefully someday I'll be sitting in the stands of Olympic Stadium in Montreal, and I'll get pulled down to the field to help guide Tim Raines, Marquis Grissom and Delino DeShields around the bases.

OK, maybe that's a little far-fetched. But I'm happy to say that my first ambition has been fulfilled.

Maybe I was thinking of bigger and better things at the time, to be rubbing elbows with my hero Leigh Montville at the Boston Globe or Sports Illustrated.

But now I realize, after seeing my byline appear 527 times in this paper since September 1986, that I have gotten what I wanted — to write about one of the things in life that I love the most.

With a little luck, I'll be able to continue my career at another newspaper after graduation. And maybe someday, Leigh and I will be sitting side by side in a bar, talking about this strange business we're in.

And I would tell him this: I'll never forget my days at UMass. Thank you, everyone, for the memories.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A long-distance phone call could lead to exciting travel plans. Be aware of new trends. A research project will help you reap higher profits. Take greater pains with your appearance.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Expect good news from friends regarding a pet project. All goes well in love. Refuse to listen to gossip or speculation about a newcomer. You meet someone who could change your whole life.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Give your mate a chance to take the lead in romance and you will be pleasantly surprised. Try to be less demanding in your personal relationships. Recycle old ideas to boost profits.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Give your mate a chance to take the lead in romance and you will be pleasantly surprised. Try to be less demanding in your personal relationships. Recycle old ideas to boost profits.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Money matters should be in good shape. The domestic scene will be more satisfying if you make some concessions to your loved ones. Be careful to keep their secrets. Romance holds new promise.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your work schedule may be overcrowded. Stretch your imagination if eager to carve out a new career. Be more understanding about a close friend's need for applause and reassurance. Romance looks terrific.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Give a new project priority over other tasks. Get everything in writing to avoid disputes in the future. If entrusted with a juicy secret, resist the temptation to share it with others.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Free yourself from restrictions that have impeded progress. A commonsense approach will yield the best results now. Expect some frustration in romance. Mate may still have some doubts.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A stranger could exert considerable influence over your life. Try to be more open-minded and enthusiastic about proposed changes at work. A secret fear is groundless. Show more self-confidence.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Get an early start and see how much you can accomplish today. Take the time to go out of your way for a friend. You could meet someone in whom you are very interested.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A good day to finalize negotiations. Offer a helping hand to a friend in need. An influential person should be treated with respect and ceremony, especially if you are seeking a favor.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Make a special effort to be patient with those who appear to be acting in slow motion. Avoid hasty words or impulsive decisions. Romance looks happy if you do not come across as too intense.

CONGRATULATIONS TO THE new sisters of Alpha Phi Epsilon: Liz, Tina, Colleen, Kim, Kathryn, Robin, and Lindy
You did a great job and we love you!!
Love Your Sisters of Alpha Phi Epsilon

KEVIN,
Strange meeting this way, isn't it? We no longer exist through space or time. We can no longer go back, nor can we see throgh the clouded present to find a future.
"When love speaks to you, believe in him, though his voice may shatter your dreams as the North wind lays waste the garden."
We believed.
And our dreams were shattered...
Two souls searching for the same perfect light...perhaps some day our souls will meet again somewhere over California. Perhaps it is too late for this lifetime...
But know that I will never forget the pain of too mch tenderness, the sweet sorrow of separations, nor the sheer ecstasy of being together.
I will remember the feeling
I will miss you.
Always, Laurie

HAPPY BIRTHDAY SUZIE! We love you! Love: Sharon, Kim, Kristy, Mike, Kristen, Donna, Bob, Rachael, & Andrea.

TO THE MEMBERS of the Minnie and Mickey Pen club. Happy Graduation! Sheila, what color is Cr's PH? Sherry, ya doo-doo! Peggy, if you see JR in VA run straight for him! Marco, remember what they say about the size of a man's nose! Love you guys! Jen

NOREEN AND STEPHEN CONGRATS!
Donna I'll miss you in Scotland!
Deb ready for next year?
-Elizabeth!

DAWN AND JEN- Thanks for being up late. Signed: The Flourescent Fighter

SPORTS

A four-year look at UMass sports

Jim Clark

Someone asked me recently what the most exciting event was that I had witnessed in my four years at the University of Massachusetts.

I really couldn't answer. I've seen so many great games, great plays, heartbreaks and emotional moments, that it's hard to pick a favorite one. What there have been though, are a lot of great memories.

- November 1986. NCAA women's soccer quarterfinal at Boyden Field. Michelle Powers shoots over the crossbar during the overtime shootout, seemingly ending the Minutewomen's season. But the goalie moved early. UMass gets another chance, and this time cashes in, reaching the Final Four again.
- February 1987. Springfield College pool. The UMass men's swimming team clinches the first of four consecutive New England championships, a true dynasty. Coach Russ Yarworth gets the obligatory toss into the water.
- November 1987. A bitter cold day at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium. For close to 60 minutes, the UMass women's soccer team battles top-ranked North Carolina to a scoreless draw. UNC's Shannon Higgins throws a harmless shot toward the goal, but it skips over goalie Carla DeSantis. UM's shot at a national championship goes by the boards.
- February 1988. The UMass women's basketball team trails Temple by one point with time running out. Christel Zullo grabs a rebound, zig-zags her way upcourt and throws in a leaner at the buzzer, giving UMass the win.
- November 1988. Cowell Stadium, Durham, N.H. The UMass football team trails the University of New Hampshire, 28-17 at the half. Suddenly, quarterback Dave Palazzi and Co. put on a show that is awesome to behold. After a 33-point third quarter, UMass wins, 64-42 and is heading for the NCAA playoffs.
- May 1989. The Stadium. A crowd of 12,143 is on hand to witness one of the most stunning lacrosse games ever played on this campus. Syracuse is hanging on for dear life to a 10-9 lead. But UMass has one last chance. Tim Soudan heads for the net and lets one rip, but goalie Matt Palumb gets his stick on it.
- February 1990. Curry Hicks Cage. A national television audience on SportsChannel watches as UMass and Temple battle it out. A feud between coaches John Calipari and John Chaney. Controversy galore. Michael Harden's three-pointer gives the Owls a triple-overtime victory.
- March 1990. The Palestra in Philadelphia. William Herndon hits a pair of free throws in the waning moments. A generous crowd of UMass fans are whipped into a frenzy as the Minutemen make their way into the Atlantic 10 championship game by beating Penn State.

These are just a few of the fond recollections of a four-year career as a sports writer at this paper. Of course, just as is true with anything in life, things aren't always rosy.

I grimaced upon learning that UMass basketball players Duane Chase, David Brown and George Hardin were arrested for burglary in January 1989.

I felt pain and anger when it was announced that budget cuts had hit hard upon the women's lacrosse and tennis teams.

But one thing I will never forget. The people of the University, through thick and thin, have always made this job as enjoyable as possible.

The coaches I have worked with, the players who I have dealt with, are amazing. I have nothing but admiration for those who have managed to juggle the rigors of academics and the pressure from the fans and from the media to succeed on the field or on the courts.

On occasion, I have had the chance to do stories on professional athletes. For many, that would be a lifetime dream come true. In a way it has for me, as well.

But certain things about so-called "professional" athletes are really bothersome, the way they treat the media. Fortunately, most every person I have dealt with at UMass has shown class. And for that, I am grateful.

I have always tried to treat the athletes the same way. Some sports writers thrive on constantly trying to humiliate athletes, to bring out the private side of people's lives. In my eyes, that wasn't my job.

I also tried to never be too harsh on teams or players. But on the other side, I never wanted to cheerlead. Fairness and objectivity are the keys to success in this business.

As Phil Axelrod, the basketball writer for the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette once told me, "It's not my job to make you look good, it's not my job to make you look bad. It's my job to make you out to be what you are."

Most importantly, I have always attempted to defend the "minor sports." True, there is more interest in foot-

Tourney time for Gorillas

First-round game vs. Brown today

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Today may be the last day of classes, but the University of Massachusetts is hoping it's the first day in a successful drive to the national championship.

The Gorillas, 10-4 and seeded eighth in the NCAA tournament, host ninth-seeded Brown University in a first-round game today at 4 p.m. at The Hill.

For UMass this will be a familiar opponent. Just two weeks ago, the Gorillas traveled to Providence, R.I. and gave coach Dick Garber his 300th career win by beating the Bruins, 21-18.

The team was charged with emotion that night, and today could match that with the prospects of the playoffs on the line.

"It's going to be a great matchup for us," Garber said.

In that last game against Brown, UMass stormed out to an 12-4 lead and led by as much as 21-12 with 7:40 left in the game before Brown made a final surge that fell short.

Don't forget . . .

Just a reminder that you can't get into today's game with a UMass student ID. Because this is an NCAA-sponsored event, all tickets are $4.

WMUA (91.1 FM) will be broadcasting all UMass lacrosse playoffs games, home and away, beginning with this afternoon's game. Tune in to Mike Fagerson, Randy Krutzler and Scott Klane for all the postseason Gorilla action.

UM stuck with split decision

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Staff

The Atlantic 10 Conference office has claimed that both the University of Massachusetts Minutewomen and the Temple Lady Owls are co-champions in softball.

The Minutewomen have appealed the decision and according to Rich McKeon, administrative assistant for the A-10, "Nothing has been finalized."

"As it stands now they are co-champs." said Cindy Mazda. Mazda is the A-10 assistant commissioner and the person who made the immediate decision after Sunday's rainout of the championship round of the tournament.

One thing is certain, there will be no A-10 championship game. UMass is appealing the co-championship status on the basis that they were one game closer to winning it all then Temple was.

Temple had been beaten by UMass in all three games this season and would have had to beat them twice in a row to win the championship outright.

Dr. Milt Richards, in charge of the Temple budget, felt that it served no purpose to complete the tournament, stating: "I suspect that it would be mute to complete those games."

Temple's argument, according to women's athletics director Michelle Willis, is that the Lady Owls wanted to play the championship as much as the Minutewomen, but that it would not be fair to the Temple players to have to play after they had been given the co-champion status. This does not answer the question of, why won't the Lady Owls travel to UMass and play on Thursday, a date that at one point was exceptable to both teams?

The Atlantic 10 conference has no idea of how long a decision would take on this matter.

PARKING AND TRAFFIC INFORMATION

A SHUTTLE BUS will be in operation on Commencement Day. Buses will provide transportation from lots 40, 25, 26, 63, 62, 32 and 34 directly to the stadium entrance. At the conclusion of the ceremony, all hell will break loose and you'll be lucky to make it out alive. No, just kidding. The buses will return guests to the various lots. If your school/college/deaprtment has a function before or after the ceremony, direct your guests to park in the lot nearest that location.

TRAFFIC REPORTS WILL BE BROADCAST througout the morning on WTTT-AM (1430). Tune in as you approach Amherst for the best route to the stadium.

ALTERNATE ROUTES — The traffic heading into Amherst is traditionally HEAVY. Tell your guests about these alternate routes if you don't want to be stuck in the congestion of Mass. Pike Exit 8 [Palmer]:

LAST-MINUTE INFORMATION FOR SENIORS

MAKE SURE TO PICK UP YOUR CAP AND GOWN before May 25, weekdays from 9-4 at the Textbook Annex. Bring your Student ID. There's no charge, and you get to keep 'em. So what if they're ugly and polyester? Your family won't be able to see you from the stands anyway. And the gowns are great for outdoor picnic tablecloths.

NO ALCOHOL will be allowed in the stadium.

INDEX YEARBOOKS will be on sale until May 25. Place your order in the Index Office, Campus Center Basement Rm. 103, or order by mail by sending a check for $25 and your name and permanent address to INDEX, Campus Center 103, Amherst, MA 01003.

DON'T PANIC, you will get you diploma by mail after the university makes sure you don't have any overdue book fines, lab fees, parking tickets, and dorm damage charges. The good news: none of that humiliating "go up and shake hands with the chancellor" crap at graduation.

TICKETS ARE NOT REQUIRED for admittance to the stadium.

LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY IN NEW ENGLAND

School year '89–'90: A brief look back

The top stories of the past year

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Spring at the University of Massachusetts is traditionally characterized by activism,— loud protests, sit-ins and even building takeovers.

This spring was surprisingly quiet on the surface, but various student protests and several headline-grabbing stories insured that the semester did not pass unnoticed.

The omnipresent issue on campus for the past several years has been the effect of the state's depressed economy on public higher education.

COMMENTARY

Student leaders claim climbing tuition and fees are blocking students out of public education, which is supposed to be accessible to all students.

Last fall, the campus went on strike for an entire week, with professors canceling classes, students ralling, and students and faculty writing and phoning state representatives to alert them of their concerns.

One of the top stories this spring was the death of a UMass student who died after he fell eight stories down an elevator shaft in a campus dormitory while 'elevator surfing.'

Elevator surfing is the practice of riding the tops of elevators and most commonly occurs in the high-rise residence halls in the Southwest Residential Area.

The student's death sent a sobering message across campus, marked by administrators' and students' warnings that the practice can be fatal.

The semester also left a mystery surrounding the brutal stabbing death of UMass junior Sharon Galligan unsolved. Galligan, a Chi Omega sorority sister, was found Dec. 18 in her car at Hampshire Mall.

Investigators say they have many suspects but little information to provide a solid link to the murderer.

Another top story during the semester was the discovery by students of color that UMass had violated its policy to divest from South Africa.

The story, which was broken by the Collegian, caused the University to sell its stock in several companies which have dealings in South Africa.

Students also charged that Israeli government bonds held by the University violate the policy, claiming that Israel is an apartheid state.

This charge touched off heated debate between Palestinian students and supporters and members of Hillel, the largest Jewish organization on campus.

Another group that garnered national attention was the Graduate Employee Organization on campus.

This union of teaching assistants, research assistants and teaching associates moved forward this semester in its efforts to gain recognition as a collective bargaining unit.

The GEO became an affiliate of District 65/United Auto Workers last May in an effort to gain collective bargaining power and job security in light of the state's fiscal crisis.

After a series of often-heated negotiations with UMass administrators, the Teaching Assistants decided to hold a 'teach-in,' holding classes at the Whitmore Administration Building to make their presence felt. TAs launched a similar teach-in the previous year.

Administrators and the GEO had hoped to reach an agreement on a union election for this fall, but at the semester's end negotiations were still continuing.

An insider's guide to the abundant acronyms of UMass

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

Acronyms abound at the University of Massachusetts, so many in fact, most freshman just throw around a lot of letters to sound like they know what they are doing.

To save the long and tedious process of learning these by word-of-mouth, here is the official Collegian acronym guide for 1990.

ALANA - Asian, Latin, African-American and Native Americans. This is an honor society for those groups.

BDIC - Bachelors Degree with Individual Concentration. This is a program in which students can create a major from classes of their choice.

BMCP - Black Mass Communications Project. The Project sponsors education and entertainment for the African-American community.

BOG - Board of Governors. This is the governing body that oversees the Student Union and Campus Center Complex.

CASA - Central American Solidarity Association. This registered student organization [RSO] advocates rights for Central Americans and Third World people.

CAG - Communter Area Government. This legislative body acts as a voice for off-campus undergraduate residents.

CASIAC - College of Arts and Sciences INformation and Advising Center. This is the main advising office for students in the College of Arts and Sciences, located in Machmer Hall, across from the front of the Student Union Building.

CCEBMS - Committee for College Education of Black

Alliance helps Gay students, old and new

By ALI WOOLWICH
Collegian Staff

A student group for lesbian, bisexual and gay students, as well as their heterosexual allies known as the Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance provides social and political activities for the campus community.

This fall the LBGA will be celebrating its 20th anniversary. To kick off the year, the group will sponsor a daytime information table near the Pond, a coffee social in the Campus Center from 4 to 6 p.m., and a film in the Campus Center from 7 to 9 p.m., on September 3, freshman orientation day.

After revamping its constitution during the Spring '90 semester, the LBGA made its governing body a collectively run group which shares responsibilities between more people, eliminating hierarchy.

The traditional President/Vice-President, Secretary/Treasurer system was replaced with a Steering Committee, consisting of a Facilitator. Treasurer,

Ways to make money to defer tuition and fees

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

As the severity of the budget cuts facing public higher education in Massachusetts increases, skyrocketing tuition and fee increases as well as decreasing financial aid have forced more and more students to take up the slack with part-time employment.

Opportunities for students to make additional money to get them through the semester, for not only books but those late night pizzas, can be found right on campus without going far away from classes.

Campus restaurants — Campus eateries like the Hatch, the Bluewall, the Top of the Campus Restaurant and the Coffee Shop offer students many flexible shifts.

Dining commons — The five dining commons, Berkshire, Franklin, Hampden, Hampshire and Worcester, always need help washing dishes and preparing food.

Snack bars and munchy stores — Cashier positions are available in the munchy stores located not only in the dining commons but also in the dormitories. The Franklin, Worcester and Hampden dining commons have munchy stores, while there are six snack bars located on campus in:

- Greenough, Central;
- Hampden, Southwest;
- Subway, Sylvan;
- "Sweets & More," Field House in Orchard Hill;
- Whitmore snack bar, Whitmore administration building;
- Worcester snack bar, Worcester dining commons.

Dormitory work — But employment is not limited to simply food or clothing services . . . Dormitories have a great need for eager students to work as mail sorters, building security and clerks in dorm cluster offices. Resident assistants should have more information available.

The Tower Library is also looking for students who recieve work study money to work all hours in a variety of positions, including filing, microfilms/microforms and clerical positions.

More employment can be found at many of the downtown Amherst and Northampton shops and restaurants, as well as at the Hampshire Mall. The Hampshire Mall keeps current job listings at the information desk.

If you are still confused as to where to go to find more information on campus employment, the University Student Employment Office, in room 239 at the Whitmore Administration Building, should be able to give you up-to-date information.

Program offers support, counseling

By ALI WOOLWICH
Collegian Staff

The Program for Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Concerns provides numerous services and opportunities for undergraduate and graduate students, according to Felice Yeskel, the program's director.

The Program, a part of the Dean of Students division along with programs such as the Everywoman's Center and Disabilities Services, provides advocacy, support, training and consulting services, information and referral services.

It also offers a lending library of books/articles/newspapers on gay, lesbian, bisexual topics, puts out a monthly newsletter, and sponsors educational and cultural programs, speakers, and workshops.

Some of the Program's upcoming events include: a '90-'91 year long gay, lesbian, bisexual cultural festival, Fall semester 'BGLADs"—Bisexual, Gay, Lesbian Awareness Days, a concert featuring Holly Near at the Fine Arts Center on November 2, and continuation of the weekly film series, which is co-sponsored by the Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance.

The Program coordinates a Speaker's Bureau consisting of gay men, lesbians, bisexual people and heterosexual allies. The members are trained to speak about issues surrounding gay, lesbian, and bisexual life, homophobia and heterosexism. The bureau does speaking engagements for classes, dorm halls, campus organizations, and other groups.

The Program is seeking interested volunteers for the Fall.

Credit-bearing internships for work in various programs are available through the Program office. Undergraduates and graduate students with work-study can apply for positions as office assistants or Teaching Assistants.

Students can also gain credit through the Program for membership in the Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Counseling Collective which trains students in peer counseling skills and in working in a collective in order to provide free, confidential peer counseling on a phone or drop-in basis.

According to Yeskel, the Counseling Collective was established for people who are questioning their sexual orientation or are having other problems coming out in the gay community.

The Counseling Collective is located in 416 Student Union and hours for the fall semester will be posted in September.

Awareness-Week Coordinator/Program Liason, Office Manager, Social Committee Chair, LBGA Representatives to the Board of Governors (two), Political Committee Chair, Outreach Committee Chair, and Lesbian, Bisexual, Women's Union (LBWU) Liason.

The inception of these committees/positions defines for each steering committee member his/her responsibilities, as well as insures that various issues and concerns will be addressed.

According to organizers, the LBGA works to improve awareness about gay, lesbian and bisexual issues and to promote a safe campus atmosphere for students. For example, each year the LBGA coordinates a Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Awareness Week — a week of speakers, workshops, cultural programs and resource information.

The LBGA has proportional representation on the Board of Governors. Members of the LBGA are currently part of the recently-formed faculty/administrative, staff/student task force which addresses issues of the gay, lesbian, bisexual community.

The LBGA makes available its office space for weekly rap groups held Wednesday nights by the Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Counseling Collective, an offshoot of the LBGA which is now a separate RSO, and Tuesday nights by the LBWU, a women's support/social group which is part of the LBGA.

The LBGA office, located at 413 Student Union, is open weekdays and nights as a safe space where gay, lesbian, bisexual people and heterosexual allies can go to hang out, study, meet people, get information on housing/jobs/etc., and get involved with the group's activities. The office can be contacted at 545-0154.

UVC - Union Video Center. They provide original and pre-recorded television programming in the Student Union and should be available on campus cable as of September.

Greek Area offers community and leadership

By CHRIS MUTHER
Collegian Staff

A fraternity or sorority can be a "home away from home," for students and also provide an opportunity to contribute to the community, according to Joanne Vanin, Dean of Students.

Vanin said the main goal of the Greek Area is to provide students with residential experience in communal living, in addition to leadership development, planning skills and organizational leadership.

The Greek area has been working closely with the town of Amherst. "The Greek has gotten a bad rep that they don't entirely deserve (in the town)," she said, "They're (now) trying to help the community."

Each of the individual houses have plans for the upcoming fall semester including rush weeks and charitable activities.

"One house is planning a Halloween Crack House, a haunted house that will warn against the dangers of drugs," Vanin said. The project is a joint venture with the Greek area, the University of Massachusetts and the town of Amherst.

Marci Blacker, president of Sigma Delta Tau, said her sorority works to "promote education in a social atmosphere."

In addition to volunteer work for the homeless and the elderly, Blacker said a requirement for her sorority is community service for the town of Amherst.

Get high. . . with a little health from your friends!

Welcome summer students and visitors to campus.

The University Health Center is located in the central residential living area. We are here to help you with your health problems and concerns and work with you so that you can maintain and improve your health.

★ Emergency care is available 24 hours a day, but please, only come after hours if you have a true emergency (an ailment or injury that is life-threatening). Whenever possible please call ahead (or call if you are not sure if your condition is an emergency). Regular clinic hours are 8:00 am to 5:00 pm, Monday through Friday.

★ Other services include comprehensive eye and dental care. These operate on a fee for service basis or with a co-payment for some services for plan members. Dental hours are Monday through Friday, 8:30 am to 5:00 pm. The Eye Clinic is open 8:00 am to 5:00 pm, Monday through Friday.

★ Mental Health (127 Hills North) is available for counseling services. Appointments are encouraged.

★ The pharmacy, where you can fill most prescriptions from a UHS physician for a $5, $7, or $15 co-payment, also sells many over the counter medications and health aids. The Pharmacy is open 8:30 am to 5:00 pm, Monday through Friday.

★ Health Education (R. 250) is the place to go for information on any health-related topic.

★ While the in-patient unit is closed for the summer, should you need hospitalization, you can receive care at Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton. You must receive a referral from a UHS physician.

For the class of '94, transfer, and graduate students and students arriving from abroad.

★ If you are on campus for an orientation, or just visiting, remember to fill out and return your Health History Questionnaire, especially the section on your immunization status. If you need a new form or assistance, the Medical Records office on the first floor can help you.

★ Please get acquainted with UHS and the many health promotion programs that occur. There are great opportunities for students to work with the UHS through the peer education programs (academic credit is available) and the Student Health Advisory Board. Call the Health Education office.

Paying for care at UHS.

★ There is a summer health plan for students at any of the five colleges who are staying in the area for the summer. The cost is $97.50 and covers routine visits and a number of other services. If you've missed the deadline (June 1, 1990) you can still enroll, although coverage does not begin until the day of enrollment. Brochures describing the plan and enrollment forms are available in the cashier's office.

★ Health care for persons attending conferences on campus is available. Contact Conference Services at 545-2591.

★ Visiting faculty and their families may purchase a Visiting Scholar Plan. See the UHS Cashier for more information.

★ Recent graduates...if you are staying in the local area and want to extend your coverage, contact the Cashier's Office about the Basic Summer Health Plan, the Student Extension Plan and Kaiser Permanente Community Enrollment.

Long/Santiago

Welcome to the ride of your life!

University life is the amusement park of adulthood and higher knowledge. It could also be a dam filled with water, overwhelming and scary, just waiting to swallow you up into oblivion.

Nevertheless, there are two arguable ways of getting through the "amusement park" part of it.

One way is the rollercoaster method.

A person can get on the rollercoaster, look straight ahead, keep their hands on the safety bar and wait out the anxiety and fear of a four-year (or longer) trip through both Heaven and Hell.

They come out a little older, a little wiser, but they might still fear the rollercoaster's speed and try to stay away.

Another is the ferris wheel.

Although somewhat slower, a ferris wheel still experiences the highs and lows, the ups and downs. And while at the top, one can see the bigger picture from a different perspective.

They get off the ride knowing what is around them, and not as afraid as they used to be.

On the other hand, unless you know how to swim real good, there's really no foolproof way for you to survive the "dam" part.

The whole purpose of college is to jump into something unknown and mystifying, with your hands over your eyes and your mouth screaming silently for help.

Help is on its way — if you care to ask for it. Or, if you're the adventurous type, you could spend the next few years just "winging it."

For many, their semesters here are not so much hurrying through a quick stay in Amherst, but rather a slow, sometimes arduous accumulation of knowledge to enable them to grasp different concepts, better understand cultures, people and ideas — and live, not just know, the true meaning of FUN.

Because of the sheer size of the University — over twenty thousand students — everyone will inevitably have a different opinion for every issue under the sun. Believe it. Whether you're a Graduate, undergrad or faculty, eighteen or eighty, Jewish, Catholic or atheist, White or a person of color.

One of the greatest assets we have as students is the ability to speak our minds and to form our own ideas based on what we hear and read. If we make mistakes, we all learn from them. Or so we wish. This is what college life is all about. Live and learn, and live a little bit more.

The Editorial/Opinion page of the Collegian is undoubtedly one of the loudest voices on campus. It is read by a vast majority of people daily, and the views expressed here range from the politically apathetic to the conservative to the radically liberal. You can choose your wild!

You may enter this community wide-eyed, but be prepared to face the long journey ahead of you — not only of classrooms, lecture halls and laboratories, but also of rallies and workshops, among other things.

Because of the Collegian, the issues of the campus and the world are at your fingertips. The opinions we print may shock, anger, elate, frighten or do absolutely nothing for you.

But they might, hopefully, change or challenge your own views.

And if you don't like what you read, don't just throw a fit and let those emotions fester in your mind. Do something about it.

Write in, tell UMass how you feel, and defend your opinions — defend other people's opinions, too.

In the long run, they're all you have. You will have nothing to lose.

The Editorial page is here to help you in your struggle to figure out what life could be all about, by providing the best medium there is for you to communicate. Hey, we've been in college long enough to know!

Or, you could teach us a thing or two about anything we've overlooked so far.

The ball's in your court.

Just some eclectic, wandering thoughts from our staffers

Here are some thoughts for the class of 1994 (oy!) from the past, present and future staff of the Collegian — we wish you the best of luck!

Take advantage of the resources available to you here like the Collegian, the Bluewall, People's Market, and the Student Union Craft Shop. If you play your cards right, you'll never even have to leave the Student Union/Campus Center complex for the next four years.

ARTS & LIVING

Ton's-o-fun with media

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

You feel the need to express the talent that's within your hands or voice and you're not sure how to go about it. Or you discover you have a lot of free time you weren't bargaining for and boom you remember there are some fantastic opportunities in the media just longing for fresh faces, thoughts and voices.

Now is the perfect opportunity to explore all the outlets for communication at UMass. It's a simple excursion into the possibilities that can be taken advantage of: WMUA, the campus radio station that services the five-college area; BMCP, a group whose purpose is to sponsor educational programming as well as entertainment concerning the Black community; UPC, the srudent run concert programming council; Index the campus yearbook; The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, the student-run campus newspaper, also serving the five-college area; Spectrum an art magazine full of literary and visual arts. You'll be making important decisions, life-long friends and gaining experience for your future. Grab onto this chance.

Aixa is studying for her PhD in the Communications department here and works at WMUA 91.1 FM. Her program (one of many on WMUA) is entitled "Una Nueva Cancion" or "A New Song." The show, which focuses on the social and political music of Latin America, originally aired about two years ago and will continue this year on Mondays or Fridays.

The station has a broadcasting capability of a 40-mile radius and is run by a staff of volunteers, and an executive committee with four positions.

BMCP or Black Mass Communications Project, offers truly impressive entertainment and educational programs relating to concerns of the Black community on campus.

BMCP is also responsible for the Funk-o-Thon, a huge party the first weekend in May that corresponds with the Malcolm X Picnic in Southwest Residential Area, a social given by Iota Phi Theta fraternity and the UPC Spring Concert.

Index is the completely student-run and volunteer-based campus yearbook. It is the third oldest published yearbook in the country according to Mary Sbuttoni, editor-in-chief for the '90-'91 issue. Tons of knowledge available here! Lets you get to know your surroundings and great people simultaneously.

No chance of beating Bub's

By MICHAEL WESTER
Collegian Staff

This much we know is true: you're in college, and you've got no money. This means (among other things) that for the next four years, you are going to have maximize your calorie intake while minimizing your expenditures. Otherwise, you die. You have two options: a) join the meal plan, or b) eat Ramen Noodles out of your dorm room hot pot..

Depressing, isn't it? But sometimes you have to splurge. When your hot pot fails fire inspection and the D.C.s are serving oatburgers, you've got no choice — you've got to eat out. Bub's Barbeque is the place to go.

On Route 116 in Sunderland, Bub's serves the most authentic barbecue food this side of the Mason-Dixon line, from chicken, fries and burgers, to catfish sandwiches, baked beans and collard greens. What makes it special is that for a moderate price you get all the food you can eat. Yes folks, all you can eat.

From $4.95 for a burger to $8.95 for a salmon steak, Bub's cannot be beat. With your meal you get a large slab of meat or fish. Fries, potato salad, baked beans, rice, french bread, hot sauce and vegetable soup — all served free — are more than you could possibly eat.

The vegetable soup deserves particular mention. In it swims cauliflower, cabbage, celery, carrots — you name it, it's in there. This soup makes even a vegetarian susceptible to the temptation of Bub's.

Not only is the food something you rarely experience in Massachusetts, but the atmosphere is as well. The free juke box offers a star-studded selection of country and other types of music. Alabama, Hank Williams Jr., the Grateful Dead, Patsy Cline, the Oak Ridge Boys, the Charlie Daniel's Band, Elvis . . . they're all there.

The wooden picnic tables, both inside and outside, are each supplied with an entire roll of paper towels for the real hogs among us.

The only unfortunate (yet conquerable) thing about Bub's is that it's too far to walk from campus and is not very accessible by bus — info can be obtained from PVTA. But if you have some wheels of your own or have a friend who does, head on out to Bub's for the culinary equivalent to paradise.

The best and worst of summer screenings

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

For the big-wigs in the movie industry, summertime means movies with big names and bigger budgets. But for most of the general public, it means a bunch of uncreative, recycled sequels and other unoriginal plots. Here's some of the best and worst of this summer's crop:

Days of Thunder — I wish I could understand Tom Cruise. First, he gains himself some credibility by starring in Rainman, then he turns around and does the horrendous Cocktail. Now, after a brilliant performance in Born on the Fourth of July, he decides to do another self-indulgent role as a race car driver. All girls' hearts will flutter as they watch the cute but tough Cruise, big nose and all, zoom around a racetrack at blazing speed. For the speed-loving boys, their jeans will get tighter when they watch Tom roll around in bed with Aussie actress Nicole Kidman. This poor excuse for a movie will make millions.

Warren Beatty stars in Dick Tracy.

Miller's Crossing — Now here's a flick worth shooting your foot off for. Brought to you by Joel and Ethan Coen, the brothers that made the Hitchcockian thriller Blood Simple, and the off-beat comedy Raising Arizona, this gangster film delivers plot twists, dark humor, plenty of suspense and fantastic special effects. This is what movie making is all about. Alec Baldwin stars.

Another 48 Hours — Eddie Murphy, fresh off the fiasco Harlem Nights, needs a hit. So does co-star Nick Nolte and director Walter "don't call me over the" Hill. So why not rehash an old winning formula? The plot is almost exactly the same as the first 48 Hours, except not as funny.

Die Hard II — Die harder. This time, Bruce Willis kills bad guys in an airport, and the racist formula calls for Latin Americans to play the terrorists. You want a big name and a big budget (with big bullets to boot), this is it. You want a good movie, see something else.

Presumed Innocent — Harrison Ford stars in this suspense film about a prosecuting attorney who is accused of murdering his mistress. This one will tell us if indeed the gracefully aging Ford has life after Indy.

A Cry in the Dark: Bloodfist II — You know you're in trouble when you make a sequel to a movie that nobody saw to begin with. This is about the wonderful world of kickboxing.

Mo' Better Blues — Spike (Do the Right Thing) Lee finally has the power to make any movie he damn well pleases. This one is about a jazz musician (Denzel Washington) who has to decide between his horn playing and his horny tendencies with two women. Like all Lee films, this one is powerful but sexist, and will undeservedly be overlooked come Oscar time.

Queens Logic — You want a cast? How does Kevin Bacon, Tom Waits, Jamie Lee Curtis, John Malkovich and a list of eclectic others sound? This strange group examines the neighborhood friendships of Queens, N.Y. It's great just to watch all these people on the screen at the same time. Kind of an alternative The Big Chill.

Graffiti Bridge — Prince's quasi-sequel to Purple Rain. Not only does The Purple One act, sing and dance all over the screen, but this one also marks the reunion of the Time, fronted by Morris ("Oak Tree") Day.

Exorcist III: Legion — Never mind Exorcist II, that had nothing to do with anything. This one is written and directed by William Peter Blatty, the man who wrote the novels The Exorcist and Legion. There's no Linda Blair or green slime this time, but George C. Scott stars. This is what good horror should be. It will play with your mind for weeks after you see it.

Quick Change — Bill Murray's pet project stars the former Ghostbuster as a man who robs a bank in New York but has a tough time making it to the airport. Obviously, it's a comedy, but not the world's funniest one. This is a huge career risk for Murray, who also co-produced and directed this.

Dick Tracy — Batman II? Not quite. By now you've heard all about this Warren Beatty vehicle and his romance with co-star Madonna. But honestly, this flick is fantastic. With it's bright colors and comic book look, this is the polar opposite of Batman. It's a lot of fun, and includes cameos from James Caan, Al Pacino and Dustin Hoffman. Please see this. I promise it's better than Ishtar.

Problem Child — A Yuppie couple adopts a kid from hell. This very dark comedy plays like Parents in reverse and is damn funny. John Ritter, trying desperately to make it on the big screen, stars.

Wild at Heart — After conquering the small screen with Twin Peaks, David (Blue Velvet) Lynch returns to film. A typical strange murder mystery, this one stars the underappreciated talents of Laura (Smooth Talk) Dern and Nicholas (Raising Arizona) Cage. Plus it has all the weird stuff you've come to grow and love from a Lynch flick.

Total Recall — See Arnold. See Arnold beat up aliens. See tons of mangled flesh. See Arnold make passes at every scantily clad female that walks by (There are tons of them.). Directed by Paul (Robocop) Verhoven, this has plenty of gore, plenty of sexism, and some biting humor, as well as some fine make-up.

Ghost Dad — Sidney Poitier directs Bill Cosby in this film about a ghost who pulls off a big business deal. Neither Cosby (remember Leonard Part VI?) or Poitier (Shoot to Kill) have been too hot on the screen as of late, and the ghost theme has been done far too many times to be done again. Lame and boring.

Slumber Party Massacre III — The title speaks for itself.

WOMEN'S TRACK – Head Coach Julie LaFreniere – The harriers placed second of 29 at New England competition, third of eight in the A-10 tourney and 10th of 53 at ECACs, their best finish in 10 years. Their only tie of the fall season was against Boston University. The team went indoors for the winter, then returned to the streets again in the spring. Winter invitational meets included: Firts Chance Meet, Smith, New Hampshire, Harvard, BU and Bates, where the Minutewomen took first of nine places. In the winter, they placed eighth of 25 at New Englands and 26th of 49 at ECACs. Eight school records were set, the triple jump and 20-pound weight were set earlier in the year only to later be broken by teammates. Tina White threw the 20-pound weight 45-11 1/4. Jen Piccioli lept the triple jump 36-1/2. LeeAnn Ambrose ran the 400-meter in :54.57; she ran the 200-meter in 25.32. Becky Johnson ran the 1000-meter in 2:51.9; she ran the 1000-yard in 2:35.3. Record-setting relay teams included the distance medley relay as well as the 4x800-meter. In the medley, Johnson (3:45.5), Ambrose (57.2), Julie Muccini (2:22.5) and Shana Smith (5:08.6) ran with a team time of 12:12.97. In the 4x800-meter, Maureen Meldrim (2:20.6), Cathy Crocker (2:18.7), Smith (2:18.9) and Johnson (2:18.1) ran with a team record of 9:16.51. They ran both the Smith and Fitchburg State Invitational in the spring. Some spring pace-setters included Shana Smith, who ran the 5000-meter in 18:31 to place second in the A-10 finals. Ambrose claimed the New England championship spot for the 400-meter and took fourth at ECACs in the same event. She finished the spring season with the highest number of individual points (68.25).

VOLLEYBALL – Head Coach Carol Ford – The team hit the downside of a rebuilding year by finishing 2-26. Coach Ford's young team is looking to put their past behind them and work on rebuilding a team injured by lost scholarship money and budget cuts. Their wins were against St. Bonaventure and Central Connecticut. They competed in the Rhode Island and Harvard Tournaments.

WATER POLO – Head Coach Russ Yarworth – The team finished the season with a record of 16-12. They place third in New Englands and fifth at Easterns, which comprises of New England, Mid-Atlantic and Southern conferences. Because of the strength of their schedule and their win/loss record, they qualified for an at-large bid into the Easterns. The Minutemen landed 20th in national polls. Jon Miller led the team in goals (63), assists (27), and points (90). He was named to the First Team All-New England. Scott Reed and Todd Larson were named to the second team, as Brian McIver was given honorable mention.

Midnight Madness

One of many new tactics John Calipari has tried and found to work is a UMass nighttime hoop version of a Rage in the Cage. Thus Midnight Madness was born with festivities beginning around 10:30 p.m. on October 15. The men's basketball team plays in the Curry Hicks Cage and fans have been known to make their share of noise. In his second year as the University's men's basketball head coach, Calipari introduced some pretty impressive marketing strategies to make Midnight Madness the success it was. NCAA rules prohibit college hoop practice before 12:01 on October 15, so what better time to showcase team talent as well as recognize and show appreciation for fans, than on October 15.

WOMEN'S ISSUES

Perspectives of women of color

As an Asian-American woman of Indian descent, I have learned a great deal about myself at UMass. I have discovered a true identity of being a person of color and a woman.

Many women of Asian descent undergo a unique experience growing up. Many of us are brought up in sexist households where we accept and learn to be inferior. I could not wait to get out of my house and go to college. I thought that when I came to UMass I would finally be free.

Minu Sebastian

Unfortunately all my problems at home came with me when I came here. Until recently I did not realize how deeply affected I am by my upbringing. Self-confidence, self-worth and self-respect are terms I am relearning and just beginning to bring out in myself.

Next semester as Co-Women's Issues Editor I hope to bring the perspective of women of color into the newspaper. In my last three years at UMass, I have yet to hear of a group on campus which focuses on issues of women of color.

There was a program at the Everywomen's Center for women of the Third World. Due to lack of funds and interest the program has been dwindling. It is possible to start support groups again for women of color if enough interest is obtained from the community.

I am looking forward to next semester. Writing and working for the Collegian has been a learning experience. I have grown so much through my various positions here.

We need writers and input to bring out the concerns, feelings and experiences of women of color. My co-editor, Amy Henry, and I hope to hear from you next semester.

Minu Sebastian is a Collegian staff member

The Everywoman's Center offers support, education

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

Women students entering the University of Massachusetts have a great deal to learn about campus resources for women; an important place and source of information is The Every Woman's Center (E.W.C.). It provides a range of supportive services and opportunities for women.

The Counselor/Advocate Program coordinated by Stacy Roth, is a part of the Against Violence Against Women Programs. It includes a group of advocates who are on duty 24-hours a day, 7 days a week, to counsel and provide information for women who are survivors of violent acts. Advocates are trained in crisis counseling and they can help women deal with the feelings that come up after experiencing violence, accompany women to the hospital and court. The Program also offers support groups for survivors of rape and incest.

The Educator/Advocate Program, coordinated by Pat Barrows, works on helping the UMass community understand the roots of violence against women through education. The Program provides training and workshops for groups that want to learn more about violence against women. Advocates are available to appear in a residence hall or at a community agency to present such workshops as Campus Violence, Acquaintance Rape, Media Images of Women and other topics of interest. Both the Counselor and Educator Advocate/Programs are located in Nelson House on East Pleasant street.

The Resource and Referral Program at Wilder Hall maintains and develops an information and referral system which includes general health, legal, social, and political resources. The Resource Room houses extensive research materials, job and housing listings, 2000 books that are available for lending, and bulletin boards listing women's services and community events. The Room is a comfortable place for women to meet, have coffee, tea and chat.

Current editions of women's magazines and newspapers from across the country are on display. A variety of books and publications of interest to women are available for purchase.

The Bridge Program, of the E.W.C. provides programming for women with multiple oppressions such as women of color, Lesbians, and disabled women. This past semester Madeleine Peters, the coordinator of the Program has organized panels of women of color and a film series for International women's day among other programs.

The E.W.C. has a Counseling Program that serves all campus and community women at Wilder Hall. Counseling is free, short-term and can be obtained on a walk-in basis. Women can receive counseling with their partners. The Program also offers self-help support groups on a variety of topics such as food/body image, coming out as lesbians, adult children of alcoholics, and separation/divorce. These groups are free, open to all campus and community women, and are confidential.

Practicum or internship credit for participation in a variety of E.W.C. programs is offered. For more information about programs call the Nelson House at 545-3474, the crisis hotline at 545-0800, and Wilder Hall at 545-0883.

Realities of sexual assault

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Staff

Rape, attempted rape, and sexual assaults are common occurrences at the University of Massachusetts.

The legal definition of rape is force or threat of force and it includes any type of penetration such as anal, vaginal, or oral. Force can mean just the fact that he is bigger and stronger. You do not have to be held down to be raped.

In spring of 1989 a survey was done by the Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office on unwanted sexual behavior of undergraduate women. 10 percent of the women surveyed said they were survivors of attempted rape and 13 percent said they had been raped. These statistics show that roughly 1,245 of undergraduate women are survivors of rape or attempted rape per year.

Sexual assaults are reported to the Dean of Students where University charges can be brought. There are women deans to whom assaults can be reported. Most assaults are reported to the Everywoman's Center where trained women in crisis calling ae available to talk with. Fifty women reported some kind of sexual assault, including rape, and over 300 women used the services E.W.C. offers in 1989.

Very few assaults are reported to Public Safety also known as the Campus Police. Six rapes and 4 sexual assaults in 1989 and 1 sexual assault and 2 rapes in 1990 have been reported. There are women police and detectives available to investigate assaults. Seventeen sexual offenses and 3 rapes have been reported since September 1989 in Amherst.

Why aren't most assaults reported? A Student Affairs survey found that 13 percent of the survivors of unwanted sexual contact did not tell anyone what had happened to them. Only 5 percent told a rape hotline and 3 percent told the police. Sixty percent told a friend or roommate.

four years than any other swimmer, set school records as well as taking the gold at New Englands with times of 44.72 in the 100-yard freestyle and 1:38.53 in the 200-yard free. He also won the 50-yard free, sweeping all three events for the second year in a row. Jay Pelouso took his own gold at NEs in the 200-yard individual medley setting a school record with a time of 1:54.9. Bill Chouinard also set a school record at NEs in the 200-yard breaststroke with a time of 2:07.87 and G.T. Ladd won the gold at NEs in the 100-yard butterfly.

WOMEN'S SWIMMING — Head Coach Bob Newcomb — The team wrapped up with a record of 8-4, placing sixth of 16 at New Englands. Michele Leary created some books of her own as the highest individual point scorer (77) set school records and meet records at New Englands. She swept the 50-yard (23.67), 100-yard (51,32) and 200-yard (1:37.31) freestyles for the second straight year in a row. The 21-year-old Leary suffered a mild heart attack last October. Eight weeks later she set seven UMass records. She was awarded the ECAC Award of Valor. The 200-yard and 400-yard relay teams also took the gold. Finishing with a team time of 1:39.31 were Keira Cruz, Kim Morin, Denise Reimer and Leary in the 200-yard. Theresa Jacobs combined with Cruz, Reimer and Leary to finish the 400-yard with a time of 3:32.06. These were both New England and school record-breakers. The New England Women's Intercollegiate Swimming and Diving Association's Championship placed Boston College first, with Providence, Maine, Northeastern and Springfield ahead of UMass, respectively.

MEN'S TENNIS — Head Coach Manny Roberts — The team took the ECAC North title from 25 competitors, finishing the regular season 7-1, 8-1 for the year. This is the first such title for UMass during Roberts' reign, the first since the Minutemen were in the Yankee Conference some 20 years ago. Their only loss was to Central Connecticut. Transfer from Penn State, Barry Wadsworth, took the singles as teammates Chris Johnson and Lloyd Teitlebaum took the doubles. Jeff Hechemy placed third in singles and Teitlebaum placed fourth in the singles. Unfortunately, both the men's and women's 1990 spring seasons were their last. The programs have been 'suspended' as a consequence of budget cuts.

WOMEN'S TENNIS — Head Coach Edwin Gentzler — The Minutewomen finished season with record of 5-5, placing fifth of five at New Englands in the fall. Their wins included Hartford, Fairfield, Springfield, Central Connecticut and Rhode Island. Amy Ryan finished the season 8-2, They finished 0-2 in the spring, with losses to Connecticut and Hartford. Returning letterwinners include captain Kerensa Eddy, Allison Agnew, Gail Girasella and Shizuko Yamasaki. Neither the men's nor women's teams could be funded to compete in the A-10 Championships held in West Virginia this past spring.

MEN'S TRACK — Head Coach Ken O'Brien — Art Smith, Jon Corso, Joe Livorsi, Pat Ryan and Herb Heffner ran away with the Eastern Conference Championship, first time in eight years. Also in the fall, the team placed third of eight at the A-10 Tournament and took home fourth of 31 at the New England Championship. They finished sixth of 10 at the Dartmouth Invitational and 15th of 32 at IC4As. During the winter season, Joe Edgarton set a personal record by putting the shot 49-2; he placed third in New England in that event. His and other performances helped push the Minutemen to finish 18th of 24 at Easterns. Winter invitationals included: Yale, New England TAC, Terrier Classic and Ocean State. In the spring they repeated their success by placing third of 14 at Easterns and eighth of 42 at New Englands. The Minutemen competed in both the Old Yankee Conference Meet and the Brown Invitational. They went on to compete at the IC4As, which was a non-scoring meet. Seven of the 11 letterwinners will return.

Garber retires

The men's lacrosse head coach, Dick Garber, completed his final year at UMass as the collegiate coach with the most wins, at 300. He joins the ranks of eight other college lacrosse coaches with 300 wins, however, Garber is the only one of the nine whose wins are strictly college wins. He was inducted into the Lacrosse Hall of Fame in 1985, an honor delivered him by his son, Ted Garber, who coaches men's lacrosse at New Hampshire. He has twice been named National Coach-of-the-Year. He was known for his dislike of scholarships, and what they represented, as well as a genuine concern for athletes' academics. He was given an honorary law degree by the University at commencement ceremonies. The playing field of the men's lacrosse team, Upper Boyden Field, also known as The Hill, has been dedicated the Richard F. Garber Field in honor of the University's only lacrosse coach. A new head coach is expected to be announced this summer.

Marshall with 9.55 on the floor. She holds second spots on both the balance beam (9.6) and vault (9.65). Erika Baxter took first place honors on the uneven bars with a score of 9.55. Coach Mitchell was named A-10 Coach-of-the-Year.

MEN'S LACROSSE — Head Coach Dick Garber — The men's team finished the regular season 10-4, making an NCAA Division I playoff berth for the fifth year in a row. This is the ninth time UMass has been in the select field since playoffs began in 1971. They lost the first round of the playoffs to Brown, 12-9, a team UMass had routed, 21-18, earlier in the season to up Coach Garber's winning streak to 300 career wins. The team outscored their opponents in goals, assists and points. Of the 22 letterwinners, 15 will return. Jim MacAleavey leads the nation with 55 assists, two spots away from being UMass' all-time leading assistman. He finished the season with 33 goals and 88 points. MacAleavey is sixth in reaching the school record for most points, he currently has 168 points. Graduate Scott Hiller finished hi collegiate career with 120 goals, 165 points. Tri-captain Hiller held the number three rung in UMass goals/career and the seventh spot in points/career. Graduates Tim Soudan and Mark Feinberg were also tri-captains.

WOMEN'S LACROSSE — Head Coach Patti Bossio — The Gazelles wound up their final seaon for UMass 4-10. Their wins were against Boston College, Hofstra, Rutgers and Vermont. Sue Murphy was chosen to play in the North-South All-Star Lacrosse game to be played at Johns Hopkins on June 8. Murphy started every game since her freshman game and led the team in total points each of her seasons at Umass. Never before has this been accomplished by a female lacrosse player. She finished this year with 31 goals, two assists for 33 points. Co-captain Murphy completed her collegiate career with 145 goals, 57 assists for 182 points. Letterwinnners include: Dolores Angulo, Cynthia Dolce, Andrea Goldman, Elizabeth Hoye, Jodi Hubberman, co-captain Ann King, Donna Murphy, Christine Panker, Christine Pearsall and Murphy. Due to budget cuts, the athletic department 'suspended' the women's lacrosse program.

MEN'S SOCCER — Head Coach Jeff Getler — The Minutemen finished the regular season with record of 7-9-2. During the season, they took four games into overtime: Dartmouth (0-0), Vermont (2-1)L, Connecticut (0-0) and Colgate (2-1)W. Game-winning goals throughout the year were scored by Ray Cunha (3), Carl Hanks, Doug Karet, Dan Lawrence and Steve Cesnek. Goalie Steve Armenti had 67 saves within 1384 minutes of play. He was named A-10 Player-of-the-Week during the season. The Minutemen took second in seventh annual Massachusetts Challenge Cup for which they were hosts. They won the Connecticut/Metropolitan Life Indoor Soccer Classic beating Maine, 1-0, in the final round on a goal by Darren Stone. Lawrence was named Most Valuable Player of the tourney. Pete McEvoy and Brett Anthony were named to the All-American Tournament Team. The Minutemen hosted the New England Intercollegiate Soccer League All-Star Game. Cesnek and McEvoy played representing UMass.

WOMEN'S SOCCER — Head Coach Jim Rudy — For a season that was touted as a 'rebuilding' year, losing six letterwinners, returning five starters, and adding nine freshmen, Coach Rudy couldn't complain with the results. Coach Rudy's 100th career win took place in the first round of NCAA competition against Virginia (2-1). The team finished the regular season schedule with a record of 10-2-4, ranked eighth in the nation, and finished the nationals with 12-4-4. The Reds took home second in the Cornell Invitaional, UMass Classic and William and Mary Invitational. During the season, the Reds had four ties, two of which were decided in overtime: Connecticut (1-1)OT, Central Florida (1-1)OT, North Carolina State (2-2) and William and Mary (0-0). After cavaliering Virginia in first round of NCAA action, the Reds advanced to quarter final action against Colorado College where they dropped a 5-2 loss. April Kater, three-time All-American, was named First Team Academic All-American by the Intercollegiate Soccer Coaches Association of America.

SOFTBALL — Head Coach Elaine Sortino — The Minutewomen ended their regular season 25-20 overall, 9-3 in the A-10. Coach Sortino tucked away her 300th win (George Mason) to boost the Minutewomen to a A-10 championship berth. She was named Northeast Regional Coach-of-the-Year in 1986. They have won four A-10 championships in the last five years (1986, 1987, 1989, 1990). They are currently contesting a co-championship awarded with Temple University. Holly Aprile served as both the offensive and defensive unit for the Minutewomen. Coach Sortino's 300th was encouraged by Aprile's pitching that game, her third no-hitter of the season. She also had two one-hitters this season. Aprile ended the season with 18 wins, 11 losses, with the most shutouts in the conference (125). She was named the A-10's Outstanding Pitcher, Player-of-the-Year, Utility Payer, Pitcher-of-the-Week (thrice) and was called to the All-Tournament Team last year. Aprile led the A-10 in batting, with an average of .411. She was second in the A-10 with seven triples, fifth with 10 doubles and 10th with 17 RBIs. Co-captain and graduate Mary Duff, who completed 11 stolen bases in 12 attempts, was named All-Conference Shortstop. Cheri DellAnno tied for first in the A-10 with a stolen base percentage of one hundred, completing nine. Sheri Kuchinskas was named A-10 Freshman-of-the-Year. Co-captain Jen Miller was named Player-of-the-Week, the only UMass softball player to do so. Barbara Meehan was named A-10 MVP in last year's tourney. The Minutewomen competed in the Bud Lite and Penn State Tournaments. Post season tournament action included a 4-2 pounce over Penn State and a 4-1 caging of Temple. In 11 years of coaching, Coach Sortino ended this year with a record of 308-135-1.

MEN'S SWIMMING — Head Coach Russ Yarworth — The Minutemen proudly closed an undefeated season, 13-0. This is their fourth undefeated season in the last five years. They have complied a 63-4 record in that time. This was the fourth year they won New Englands, their fourth straight title. The Minutemen finished 18th of 42 at Easterns. UMass is moving up in the ranks, nationally, mind you

One of many facets of the University is the athletic department, where records can be made and hearts can be broken. Glancing back at the past sports seasons, take a look at some highlights of some of the best (often free) entertainment UMass has to offer.

Hustling for victory after victory, the Minutemen fell short (Maryland, 91-81) of taking it all the way in the first round of National Invitational Tournament, their first berth since 1977. Come Rage in the Cage to cheer on UMass' young hoop team.

BASEBALL — Head Coach Mike Stone — The Minutemen finished with a 26-20 regular season record, 12-4 in the A-10 and 23-15 in the North. For the second time in three years, they grabbed the A-10 Championships, routing George Washington to advance to semis. They were knighted by Rutgers in 14 innings, (8-7)L, then walloped by West Virginia, 9-1. This was the third time in the last four years that UMass has qualified for the four-team, double-elimination affair. Graduate Drew Comeau was named the Eastern Division MVP, with a national rank of eigth in hitting with .385. Comeau, a two-sport athlete, now holds a UMass single-season record of 17 doubles, and a school record of 29 homeruns for his career. Mike Tobin, also a two-sport athlete, contributed a lot of pitching time to this season. Both Comeau and Tobin played football. Co-captain Derek Dana was named First Team A-10 Catcher. Co-captain Ian Torres, along with Brian Bright and Glenn DiSarcina made the Second Team. Of the 10 letterwinners, only two have graduated.

MEN'S BASKETBALL — Head Coach John Calipari — The team finished 17-14, regular season 15-12, placing sixth in the A-10 Conference. It's the minutemen's first winning record since 1978. They clouted both West Virginia and Penn State to advance to the A-10 finals to face Temple University only to lose 53-51 in a facility smaller than the Cage (can you believe such a site exists?). They then got a post-season National Invitational Tournament bid, first time since 1977, and faced University of Maryland to drop 91-81. Cary Herer was named First Team Jewish All-American by a national Jewish magazine, and set a single-season assist record of 228. Jim McCoy was chosen for A-10 First Team, first time in league history for a UMass player to receive this honor. McCoy scored his 100th career point this season. McCoy was twice named A-10 Player-of-the-Week as well as the Mile High Classic All-Tournament Team member. William Herdon was selected for the A-10 Third Team. Tony Barbee and Harper Williams made the All-Freshman Team. Barbee was thrice named Freshman-of-the-Week during the season. Williams was named co-Freshman-of-the-Week. The Minutemen were hosts to Abdow's Hall of Fame Classic in December. UMass represented the Yankee Conference, while Boston College of the Big East, Northwestern of the Big 10 and Dartmouth of the Ivy League appeared. Ten of 15 letterwinners will return.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL — Head Coach Kathy Hewelt — The team finished the regular season with 5-24. Their wins were against Hartford, Central Connecticut, Duquesne, Harvard and St. Bonaventure. They proceeded to make a A-10 Tournament berth knocking the Bonnies 77-72. They, however, lost to the Red Knights of Rutgers in the second round of A-10 play, 86-55.

The Reds aren't just reaching for the Nationals, they've tasted dessert (Virginia, 2-1W) and want to return for the main course (Colorado College). Follow these racey Reds in their beeline to the NCAA Division I Women's Soccer finals.

WOMEN'S CREW — Coach Deb Fine — The second boat took home the silver, edged by Wesley at New Englands. The novice first boat placed third behind Wesley and Tufts. Defending champs, the varsity placed a disappointing fourth, as did the JV boat. The Dad Vail Invitational is the Division III National Championships, held on the Skuykill River in Philadelphia. At the Dad Vail, the novice boat placed fourth of 47, and the varsity boat advanced to the quarterfinals.

MEN'S CREW — Coach Dave Trond — The varsity lightweight rounded up an undefeated season by winning their first New England Invitational Rowing Championship. The team, subsequently, also took home the points trophy for aquiring the most points in the meet, a first for UMass. The novice lightweight took home the silver, edged by Coast Guard. Both the varsity and novice heavyweights placed third behind Coast Guard and New Hampshire, and New Hampshire and Connecticut College. At the Dad Vail Invitational, the varsity team reached quarter final competition. The novice boat placed fifth of 41, and the varsity lightweight placed eighth. Rich Scannel and Chris Marino have been invited to join the Lightweight Summer Development Camp. This camp is one of several steps rowers can take toward becoming members of the U.S. national team.

FIELD HOCKEY — Head Coach Pam Hixon — The team finished the year 15-6-2, 13-4-2 in the regular season, and landed spot two in the Atlantic 10 and nationally. The field hockey team have had a winning season since the berth of the team in 1975. They have been ranked as the nation's best since 1977. Defending champs of A-10 Tournament, took home second place in the tourney this past season. The Minutewomen caged the Owls of Temple 3-1 in the first round of the A-10 Tournament but were stopped short by Old Dominion who took them 1-0. For the 10th time 11 years, they were invited to the NCAA Tournament. The Minutewomen routed Boston University 1-0 in four overtimes to advance to finals against Old Dominion who again took them in a rough 2-1 game. Ties in the regular season included Northeastern (1-1) and BU (1-1). All-American Kathy DeAngelis, along with Kerri Fagan, Mara Frattasio and a newly-recruited Philippa Scott, who was a goalie for England's National Under-21 team, were named to the All-Northeast Regional Team. Bernie Martel was named to the Second Regional Team. Sherlan Cabralis was also a new recruit, hailing from Trinidad.

Just to let you know what type of competition we're up against, here's a list of the industrious Yankee Conference:

Boston University
Connecticut
Deleware
Maine
New Hampshire
Rhode Island
Richmond

. . . and the illustrious Atlantic 10:

Dusquesne
George Washinton
Penn State
Rhode Island
Rutgers
St. Bonaventure
St. Joseph's
Temple
West Virginia

FOOTBALL — Head Coach Jim Reid — The team finished the season 5-5-1, 3-5 in the Yankee Conference. Reid was Yankee Conference as well as New England Coach-of-the-Year in 1988. This is his fourth year as head coach. This particular season looked like what one sportswriter referred to as the M*A*S*H medical unit, with 10 starters out or recovering from injuries. Mike Tobin was named Academic All-American at wide receiver for New England; he is also a candidate for national honors. Gary Wilkos won the Bill Knight Trophy which is awarded to the Most Valuable Player of the UMass-New Hampshire game; he's the fourth to receive the award in as many years. Wilkos was named Yankee Conference Rookie-of-the-Week five times during the season. In two straight weeks Wilkos achieved 'double-triple' (100 yards passing and rushing) in just over three quarters of play. He scored three TDs in that game, the most by a UMass QB in over 20 years. Chip Mitchell broke all-time receiving record with 1,590 career yards with 100 receptions. Jerome Bledsoe was named ECAC offensive Player-of-the-Week, carrying the ball 19 times for 209 yards including two TDs (Lehigh), the most rushing yards in a game for UMass since 1982. Don Capriotti was also named Yankee Conference Player-of-the-Week during the season.

MEN'S GYMNASTICS — Head Coach Roy Johnson — The Minutemen finished the regular season 6-6, ranked seventh in the East. The team won the New England Championship and finished fifth out of eight in the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League Championship. Cal Booker, ranked 19th on the floor, finished fifth on his floor routine and eighth in vaulting at NCAA Division I Eastern Regional Finals. Carl Russ, ranked 24th in still rings, and Booker represented UMass at the NCAA Regional Finals with co-captain John Eggers and Steve Christiansen as alternates. Eggers, now a graduate, was honored as Most Enthusiastic and Most Improved Gymnast. Co-captain Bart Balocki, a Dean's List student, received the coaches' Positive Mental Attitude Award as well as the Outstanding Student Leader Award.

WOMEN'S GYMNASTICS — Head Coach Alfie Mitchell — The team finished the season with a record of 13-2, their only loss being to Towson State. The Minutewomen placed second of seven at the A-10 Tournament and third of seven at the Northeast Regionals. The team broke the team point record four times this winter. Tammy Marshall finished 11th of 86 competitors in the vaulting competition at the NCAA Division I gymnastics championship and was named the A-10 Freshman-of-the-Year as well as the A-10 All-Around. She set a new school record of 9.7 on the vault and 9.7 on the balance beam. Marshall tied the score of 9.55 for floor exercises and placed second (UM standards) All-Around with marks of 37.45. Her scores on the vault and beam were set at the meet with Bridgeport and Rhode Island Colleges. Marshall is the first and youngest to win All-Around competition at the A-10 Championships. Kristin Turmail set school records on the uneven bars (9.6) and tied
